NEW YORK—US pharmaceutical giant Merck announced a global withdrawal Thursday of its blockbuster arthritis drug Vioxx, currently taken by close to 2 million people worldwide, after a study showed it doubled patients' risk of heart attack and strokes.

Vioxx posted sales of $2.5 billion last year and has been widely marketed as a safe alternative to aspirin.

DOJ rules out amnesty

Bush gives RP special mention on terror fight

By Juliet Labog-Javellana and Christine O. Avendaño

THE PHILIPPINES got a special mention from US President George W. Bush during the first US Presidential Debate viewed by an estimated 50 million Americans and millions more around the world.

During the first part of the debate between Bush and his Democratic rival Sen. John Kerry, the US President mentioned the Philippines as he defended his decision to take on Iraq after 9/11.

Kerry had attacked Bush for going after Saddam Hussein and allowing Osama bin Laden to go scot-free.

In turn, Bush asserted that the US and its allies were making progress on the war on terror.

"But the front on this war is more than just one place. The Philippines ... we've got help ... we're helping them there ... to bring al-Qaida affiliates to justice there," Bush said in the 90-minute debate devoted to the issue of the US foreign policy and Iraq.

"And of course Iraq is a central part in the war on terror," the US President said.

Although the Philippines was BUDDIES they're not. Just good sports after the presidential debate between the main contenders in the Nov. 2 US elections, the incumbent, Republican George W. Bush, and the Democratic senator from Massachusetts, John Kerry. The first of three scheduled debates was held at the University of Miami in Florida.

Oakwood mutineers beyond GMA reach, says justice secretary

By Philip C. Tubeza, Juliet Labog-Javellana and Armand M. Nocum

THEY ARE beyond the reach of even President Macapagal-Arroyo.

After days of seemingly conflicting statements from Malacañang and Camp Aguinaldo, the Department of Justice yesterday categorically ruled out amnesty for the Oakwood mutineers facing coup charges before civil courts.

"The cases against them have been filed in court. They are already beyond the reach of the President," Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez said, referring to 32 junior officers and enlisted men linked to the July 2003 takeover of the Oakwood Hotel in Makati City.

"There is no more means that I know of for us to drop or withdraw the cases," Gonzalez added.

Defense Secretary Avelino Cruz raised on Wednesday the possibility of an amnesty when he told reporters that Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita had called a meeting of defense and military officials "to discuss and study the mechanisms for amnesty because this may need the concurrence of Congress."

On Thursday, Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye said something else. He said amnesty for the mutineers was never discussed at a Palace meeting of defense, military and justice officials.

In an earlier statement issued by Bunye also on Thursday, a reference to the possibility of an amnesty as part of a reconciliation process was edited out.

Talking to reporters yesterday, Gonzalez said a supposed plan to grant amnesty to the Magdalo rebels after their leaders publicly apologized to Ms Arroyo was never discussed in Malacañang. He said Ms Arroyo had not given his department any directive to study such a plan.

He said the Department of National Defense also had not made any inquiries with the DOJ about possible amnesty for the rebels.

The Makati Regional Trial Court is currently hearing coup d'état charges against 32 soldiers over the failed mutiny. The Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) has also initiated court-martial proceedings against them and more than 200 other soldiers.

"That is the situation. The only possibility is to grant a general amnesty, but that is for Congress to decide and not for the President," Gonzalez said.

He said that if a general amnesty was granted, the rebels would also be cleared of charges before military courts.

Gonzalez said Ms Arroyo could pardon the mutineers only after they had been convicted in court.

On July 20, Makati Judge Oscar Pimentel allowed at least 27 of the 32 accused to post a P100,000 bail each since there was not enough evidence to show that they led the mutiny.

Pimentel, however, denied bail to the alleged ring leaders on grounds that the evidence against them was strong.

Lawyer Roberto Pulido, the rebels' counsel, has asked the Supreme Court to stop the court-martial proceedings against the mutineers, arguing that the military court has no jurisdiction over them.

Pulido explained that Pimentel ruled on Feb. 11 that the charges against his clients were "not serious."

Kerry wins 1st presidential debate, polls say

WASHINGTON—Democrat John Kerry stood his ground with President George W. Bush in their first televised debate, delivering a strong performance that could put him back into the election race after weeks on the ropes, according to analysts who assessed the protagonists' sparring.

Instant polls conducted by US television networks gave a clear edge to the Massachusetts senator after a showdown Thursday (yesterday morning in Manila) with Bush on foreign policy and national security issues that was dominated by Iraq.

CBS showed Kerry the winner by 44-26 percent and ABC by 45-36 percent. A CNN/Gallup poll put the margin at 53-37 percent and said 46 percent reported feeling better about the Democrat after the debate, compared to 21 percent for Bush.

Analysts agreed that neither Kerry nor Bush landed any heavy blows during the 90-minute encounter at the University of Miami, the first of three presidential debates before the November 2 election.

"This was the closest thing to a tie," said Larry Sabato, director of the University of Virginia's Center for Politics. "I really was impressed. Kerry was articulate and crisp for once and Bush, I've never seen him so articulate."

Belgian is animal's best friend in Palawan

By Mariet D. Salazar

THERE'S a good story to be told on the feast today of St. Francis of Assisi, the patron of animals.

It is a sweltering afternoon on the pier of Puerto Princessa and carabaos are being loaded on a ship bound for a slaughterhouse in Manila.

The shippers are packing the carabaos—horns and all—like sardines and the beasts of burden are beginning to stomp and wound each other. The boat trip, which could last anywhere from 30 to 60 hours, has not even started.

Yes, they are going to be slaughtered, but do they have to suffer?

Not if Belgian animal welfare expert Jackie Baur, 60, could help it.

She stands by the pier and makes sure the carabaos aren't loaded too early so they can stretch their legs. She checks that the trucks are not overcrowded, and that the shippers give water to the carabaos during the trip.

Jackie has long ago realized that she cannot do anything to save the carabaos from slaughter, but she makes sure they are not maltreated or made to suffer any more than they have to.

GSIS chief got P11-M housing loan in 2 days

By Norman Bordadora and Gil Cabacungan Jr.

WINSTON Garcia got a P11-million loan in only two days. But then he would "rather borrow than steal."

The loan made up the latest accusation to be made against Garcia, president and general manager of the Government Service Insurance System, by members of the militant Confederation for the Unity, Recognition and Advancement of Government Employees (or Courage) and a faction of the Kapisanan ng Manggagawa ng GSIS (KMG).

According to documents presented by his accusers, Garcia applied for a P12-million loan on Nov. 4 last year under the Bahay Ko Program of the GSIS, and he secured P11 million two days later.

The GSIS Pabahay Executive Committee issued Resolution No.

005-03 approving the loan to Garcia, who used the money to buy a 520-sq.-m. house and lot on Juan Luna Street, Lorenzo Village, Makati City. He is under fire for alleged mismanagement and misuse of state pension funds.

"I'd rather borrow than steal. There's nothing irregular with this because any member can get a housing loan in two to five days if their papers are complete," Garcia said yesterday in a phone interview. "I was treated like an ordinary GSIS member."

He said he decided to buy a house because he deemed it more

By Rianche S. Rivera

FOUR national officials are involved in "jueteng," or the illegal numbers game, one of them receiving as much as P6 million a month from the gambling operators, claimed the anti-gambling vigilante, Pangasinan Archbishop Oscar Cruz.

But Cruz, who chairs the Krusdang Bayan sa Jueteng, refused to identify the officials, not even to say whether they were elected or appointed, or to provide details of the "private and confidential inquiry" that was supposed to have uncovered the story.

"At a joint press conference in Manila yesterday with Philippine National Police Chief Edgardo Aglipay, Cruz also said that he knew of at least six mayors protecting and promoting jueteng."

"They are giving positive protection, not just beneficial tolerance," said Cruz who fended off all attempts by journalists at the forum to extract more information from him.

"One of the mayors is receiving P500,000 a month from the jueteng operations in his jurisdiction," he said.

He said he would give the names of the national officials that he is accusing of involvement in illegal gambling to Aglipay "when the evidence is strong."

Aglipay pledged to provide security to anti-gambling advocates like Cruz who has reportedly been receiving death threats.

Cruz, who claims to have found out about the four national officials' operations in the middle of the year, said the private inquiry called "Trace the Centavo" followed the money in the jueteng operations.

He said those who conducted the survey received the information from small-time jueteng collectors and the operators led them to where the jueteng collections went.

"You will come to a stop where you cannot trace it any higher, and so far we have stopped on all these four counts. We seem to find nobody else above those four (officials)," he said.

The suspect officials who are holding national office operate in Luzon and the Visayas and are still active in government, said Cruz.

He said two of the officials receive payola for giving protection to the jueteng operators. The other two seem to be actively involved, "as if they are really part of syndicated gambling," he said.

Cruz refused to name the officials, saying he wanted to be very sure of their involvement before jumping the gun.

"We have to be sure. We would like also to protect their good names. We will give the matter to General Aglipay to check the validity or invalidity of our findings," he said.

Jueteng is a P30-billion-a-year business, patronized mainly by the desperately poor who hope to improve their lives by winning the numbers game.

Aglipay said that "if evidence is given to us, we will file a case."

He urged lawmakers to pass more stringent laws against illegal gambling in much the same way that Congress increased the jail terms for those arrested for illegal drug pushing and possession.

Aglipay said the "100 percent" of those arrested for illegal gambling are able to post bail because they are bankrolled by the jueteng syndicates.

"Sometimes the jail term is just one day, so we have to let them go," he said.

He said the PNP has a list of so-called gambling lords who are already being monitored but few have been arrested. Those who are caught are always able to post bail and resume their operations.

"Going after the gambling lords is like arresting drug lords. Arrests are done among the small jueteng operators. You do not know who's behind it. It's hard because those arrested won't tell who the (gambling lords) are," the PNP chief said.

The Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines is mobilizing its 85 diocesan social action centers nationwide to monitor the PNP's commitment to the anti-jueteng drive.

Cruz, the most visible cleric in the Church's anti-gambling campaign, is reportedly confronted with death threats but has refused the offer of a security detail from the Pangasinan police.

Mahathir arriving in Manila on Monday

By Juliet Labog-Juvelano

FORMER Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad is arriving on Monday to hold talks with President Macapagal-Arroyo and business leaders.

The President will host dinner for Mahathir at the Palace on Monday, the start of a two-day working visit for the ex-premier who retired in October 2003 after 22 years at the helm of the Muslim-led Southeast Asian country.

He is scheduled to address a session of the Philippine Business Conference on Tuesday.

Mahathir's visit comes as the government and the separatist

CBCP spokesperson Msgr. Herenando Coronel said the CBCP supported Cruz's investigation into the involvement of national officials in jueteng.

Coronel said the CBCP-National Secretariat on Social Action, Justice and Peace will submit its findings on jueteng to the CBCP plenary assembly in January.

He said the CBCP would also use its partnership with the Ombudsman's office to initiate action against erring officials.

End violence, bishop urges Tabara killers

BACOLOD CITY—Bacolod Bishop Vicente Navarra yesterday called on the killers of rebel leader Arturo Tabara to put an end to the violence, saying that killing was "not the best way to promote peace."

Tabara, 53, chair of the Rebolusyonaryong Partido ng Manggagawa-Pilipinas and Stephen Ong, 19, the boyfriend of Tabara's daughter and a Silliman University student, were gunned down by suspected communist hitmen in Quezon City last Sunday.

The RPM-E, a breakaway group of the Communist Party of the Philippines, has blamed the CPP and its armed wing, the New People's Army, for Tabara's killing.

Tabara is said to have been on the CPP hit list after he broke away from the mainstream rebel movement. Carla P. Gomez, PDI Visayas Bureau

Ombudsman set to probe Lorenzo's cell, jet fuel bills

By Armand N. Necum, Carlito Pablo and Norman Bordadora

FORMER Agriculture Secretary Luis "Cito" Lorenzo Jr. is set to be investigated by the Office of the Ombudsman and Congress for allegedly charging to the government his high cellular phone bills and jet fuel expenses while at the helm of the agency.

Lorenzo Jr. allegedly incurred P324,287 in cellular phone bills and 2.9 million in jet fuel expenses which he charged to attached agencies of the Department of Agriculture.

Assistant Ombudsman Ernesto Nocos said Lorenzo's reputation as the richest member of the Cabinet will not shield him from investigation specially if it is proven that he dipped his hands into public funds.

"If there are evidence that he used public funds to maintain a high living, then we can initiate investigation and if evidence warrants, file graft charges against him," said Nocos.

Lorenzo, a scion of the Davao-based family that controls Del Monte Philippines Inc., is reputed to be the richest member of the Macapagal administration, with a declared net worth of P512.122 million as of 2003.

Nocos, however, said they will wait for the Commission on Audit to formally endorse to them its report on Lorenzo's high telephone bill.

"We will immediately start the investigation as soon the COA endorses the report to us," he said.

According to Nocos, this is the first time they are investigating an official who has incurred that much phone bill.

In Congress, Rep. Rafael Mariano (party-list Anakpawis) is seeking a congressional investigation into Lorenzo's alleged cellular phone expenses.

"It is grossly unjust to farmers and fishers struggling to keep afloat from the impacts of globalization while Lorenzo kept talking and texting with his cell phone," Mariano said.

Mariano said that aside from Lorenzo's mobile phone expenses, Congress will also look into the other bills he racked up while DA chief.

These include P2.5 million in funds intended to mitigate effects of the El Niño dry spell, which he used to charter private planes, and P5.3 million for radio spots "at a time when the phenomenon did not occur."

COA records show that Lorenzo reportedly charged his phone bills to Quedan Rural Credit Guarantee Corp. (Quedancor) which he chaired as DA secretary.

Lorenzo remains chair of Quedancor and the Land Bank of the Philippines.

The left-wing Kilusang Magbubukid ng Pilipinas also called for a more stringent audit of Lorenzo's expenses.

The KMP revealed that Lorenzo also allegedly charged to Livexor, another DA attached agency, the P440,000 bill for his private trips in a Lear jet.

Politico linked to shabu megalab

By Nelson F. Flores and Jhunnox Napallacan PDI Visayas Bureau

INTERIOR Secretary Angelo Reyes yesterday ordered the investigation of an influential Central Visayan politician who is being linked to the alleged mastermind of an international drug syndicate behind the operation of the country's biggest "shabu" laboratory in Mandaue City which was raided last week.

Reyes, who was appointed as Dangerous Drugs Board Officer-in-Charge early this week, ordered Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency Director General Anselmo Avenido Jr. to look at all angles in the case and to verify incoming reports.

Reyes, however, declined to identify the politician involved pending the result of the PDEA investigation. PDEA sources said this politician lost in the May elections.

But Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr. and Cebu Rep. Antonio Cuenco urged drug enforcement authorities to unmask the principal Filipino culprits behind the big Mandaue shabu laboratory.

Pimentel and Cuenco stressed that the PNP and PDEA should exhaust all efforts to trace and pin down the big fish who own and operate the Mandaue drug laboratory, in the face of suspicion that they enjoy the protection of well-placed officials in the civilian and law enforcement agencies, particularly in Cebu.

The Philippine government is now seeking custody of the suspected syndicate mastermind identified as Calvin de Jesus Tan who was arrested by Hong Kong authorities Wednesday night at a ferry terminal bound for Macau.

Cuenco, chair of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, said he would propose to the Department of Foreign Affairs the cancellation of Tan's passport so he can be deported to the Philippines.

Cuenco was expected to meet with DFA officials yesterday afternoon to discuss the matter.

Tan, 29, was detained by Hong Kong authorities as he tried to flee Hong Kong to neighboring Macau. He has been under surveillance since he arrived in Hong Kong last week.

Mobile Services that Improve OFWs' Lives at Home and at Sea

A musical feast for the eyes and the ears.

President GMA and Fr. Savino Bernardi, CS with this year's winner of the Outstanding Seamen of the Year (left): The wife of Capt. Ernesto S. Menorca, 3/O Lugen T. Orillano, Capt. Gregorio B. Salsaa and the son of the late Capt. Wilfredo P. Abuid, Sr.

The Philippines is a seafaring nation. Filipinos historically sailed vast bodies of oceans to fish and to trade. It is not so surprising then that the country is the biggest supplier of seamen in the world, with more than 200,000 of them onboard ocean-going vessels or luxury liners as of last year's count.

Globe Kabababayan, the newest service handle by innovations leader Globe Telecom for the OFWs and their families, paid tribute to Pinky seafarers in two recent events, namely, the 9th National Seafarers' Day at the Quirino Grandstand and the 1st United Filipino Seafarers Summit held at the Trade Hall of the Harrison Plaza Shopping Mall.

The sponsorship of these two separate events are Globe Kabababayan's way of recognizing the contributions these modern day seafaring heroes make for the national economy and the sacrifices they endure at sea to help improve the lives of their respective families.

Globe Kabababayan kicked off its fine roster of activities for the Pinky seafarers at the 1st United Filipino Seafarers Summit held on September 23-26, 2004. This four-day livelihood symposium gave seafarers and their families ideas to help them set up their own small and medium sized businesses.

At the summit, Globe Kabababayan showcased the potential of AutoloadMAX as a convenient means to earn extra income. Globe Senior Account Manager for Overseas Mobile Service/Wireless Sales and Distribution Apa P. Armanento told a packed audience how by availing of an AutoloadMAX retailer SIM, they can expect to make at least P4,000 monthly or more by simply selling prepaid loads to Globe Prepaid and Touch Mobile subscribers. As a case study, he used the story of Susan Sacro, a housewife of an OFW who now earns more than P20,000 by just selling AutoloadMAX prepaid load credits. Realizing the quick financial yield of being an AutoloadMAX retailer, a large portion of the audience immediately signed up at the Globe booth after the presentation.

Part of the services being enjoyed by Filipino seafarers today is also the availability of Globe's International Roaming Service which allows one to communicate to his or her loved ones in the Philippines as soon as they dock on the shore. Only Globe has an international roaming service for both postpaid and prepaid subscribers that permits calling and texting even while abroad.

Globe Kabababayan closed the summit with an hour-long variety show which combined elements of a game show and a live concert. The top notch comic and musical antics of popular talents Keempee De Leon and Tuesday Vargas kept the audience highly entertained and rolling and laughing in their seats.

Globe Kabababayan also sponsored the 9th National Seafarers Day celebrations at the Quirino Grandstand held on September 26, 2004. This annual event organized by the Apostleship of the Sea, a Catholic lay and religious organization found in 300 ports throughout the world, paid tribute to Filipino seafarers who remained true to the ideals of Christian living while away at sea and from their families.

No less than the President herself, Gloria Macapagal Arroyo was on hand to hear the Eucharistic Celebration given by the Most Reverend Precioso Canillas, DD, and also to give the award for the most Outstanding Seafarer of the Year.

This year the award was given to 3/O Lugen T. Orillano, Captain Gregorio B. Salsaa, the late Captain Wilfredo Abuid, Sr. and Captain Ernesto S. Mendoza. Globe Kabababayan donated the trophies and the AutoloadMAX retailer SIM pre-loaded with P1,000 given to each of the winners.

Other distinguished guests at the celebration were Department of Labor and Employment Secretary Patricia Sto. Tomas, Undersecretary for Migrant Workers Affairs-Department of Foreign Affairs Jose Brillantes and Maritime Industry Authority Administrator Vicente Suazo, Jr.

Knowing the valuable service these modern day heroes do for their country and their families, Globe Kabababayan continuously helps alleviate the living conditions of their families back home while strengthening their relationships across the distance.

NPAs kill 4 cops in Davao

By Anthony S. Alada and Ferdinand O. Zuasola
PDI Mindanao Bureau

DAVAO CITY—Four policemen were killed in an ambush by communist guerrillas in Baganga, Davao Oriental, yesterday morning, authorities said.

Provincial police chief Supt. Catalino Cuy said New People's Army (NPA) rebels ambushed the policemen in the center of the town, shooting two dead.

The rebels snatched two other policemen who were later found dead in the outskirts of the town a few hours after the ambush, Cuy told reporters.

The attack occurred several days after soldiers from the Army's 30th Special Forces Company raided an NPA camp in Barangay Coog here. No rebel was found in the area.

Cuy identified the slain policemen as police officers Ramilito Bonghanny, Jose Marlon Avellanosa, Juan Gambong and Alfredo Cutaran.

Cuy said the four were in a patrol car on their way to market to buy supplies when they were attacked by rebels believed to be under the NPA's Front Committee 15.

Cuy said the rebels fled on motorcycles with an M-16 Armalite rifle and four .45 caliber handguns taken from the policemen.

Col. Agane Adriatico, military spokesperson for South-eastern Mindanao, said soldiers helped the police track down the rebels led by a "Kumander Domingo."

Rebs free jailed comrade

SUSPECTED communist guerrillas ambushed a prison van to free a detained comrade, officials said yesterday. Five suspected NPA rebels hit the prison van Thursday in Mawab, Compostela Valley, snatching captured NPA intelligence officer Jordan Donillo as jail guards took him to a court hearing, a police report said.

Four people—two jail guards, a clerk and a driver—were hurt in the attack.

The NPA has stepped up attacks against the police and the military in the province in recent days.

Last month, two police officers in San Isidro town were gunned down by suspected rebels. NPA rebels also stormed an outdoor dance party and disarmed a police officer. Aside from Davao Oriental, communist rebels also stepped up activities in other provinces.

Elsewhere, government troops shot dead a member of a breakaway communist guerrilla faction in a clash near Arayat, Pampanga on Thursday, Army spokesperson Lt. Col. Buenaventura Pascual said.

The man was a suspected member of the Revolutionary Alliance of the Children of the Sweat, an NPA offshoot, he added. Reuters, Jofelle R Tesorio, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau, AFP

Rebels attack troops guarding Malampaya natural gas project

ABOUT 20 communist guerrillas ambushed troops guarding the $4.5-billion Malampaya natural gas project, the country's largest energy project, killing a civilian and wounding four soldiers, an Army spokesperson said Friday.

Lt. Col. Restituto Padilla, a military spokesperson, said the soldiers were on board two Army trucks on their way back to the main Army base in Puerto Princesa on Wednesday when about 20 New People's Army rebels tried to stop the convoy.

The trucks were coming back at around 11:30 a.m. after transporting personnel and supplies to the headquarters of Task Force Malampaya which is guarding the Malampaya gas project when the troops were attacked in Sitio Ibangle, Abangan, Taytay, Palawan. An hour-long firefight ensued.

"Malampaya is safe and secure," Padilla said. "Our security forces are on a high-state of alert and a pursuit operation is under way to punish the rebels."

Padilla said a civilian who had hitched a ride on one of the trucks was killed and four soldiers were wounded in the initial burst of gunfire. The rebels were driven back in a brief gun battle.

The wounded soldiers were taken to the nearest hospital for treatment.

The civilian fatality was identified as Fernando Huerta who died of multiple gunshot wounds in the chest and legs. The injured soldiers were identified as Master Sgt. Diosdado Banago and Staff Sgt. Nestor Mendoza, both of the Philippine Army; Seaman Nelson Abuid and Airman First Class Roger Laroza.

In an interview, CPP-NPA spokesperson Gregorio "Ka Roger" Rosal said he still had to confirm if NPA rebels were behind the ambush.

The Melito Glor Command of Southern Tagalog operates in Palawan, he said.

Some residents of Sitio Ibangle said they heard several gunshots that lasted for about three hours and saw some armed men took two rifles from the trucks when the military fled.

Pursuit operations against the rebels were launched by the 570th Composite Tactical Wing based in Puerto Princesa. Two UH-1H helicopters and two OV-10 Broncos attack planes were dispatched to hunt the rebels who fled to nearby jungles. Navy gunboats also set up a blockade around Taytay town.

The military said the rebel attack in Palawan was a rare occurrence.

Padilla said not a single incident had been reported since November 2001 when a military task force was formed to secure the energy project.

The project is operated by a consortium led by a unit of the Royal/Dutch Shell group. Shell Philippines Exploration BV and ChevronTexaco have 45 percent stake each, with the remaining 10 percent held by the state-run PNOOC Exploration Corp.

The Malampaya field, which has recoverable reserves of 2.5 trillion cubic feet of gas and 85 million barrels of condensate, fuels three power stations with a combined capacity of 2,700 megawatts.

In May, the defense and energy departments agreed to beef up security in Malampaya because of fears of possible sabotage by militants such as the Abu Sayyaf group.

A $21.5-million project to install an air and surface defense system—comprising radars, communications links and weapons—is also planned to protect the single largest foreign investment in the Philippines. Reuters, Alcuin Papa and Jofelle R Tesorio, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau, AFP

'Da King' a no-show in Muslim wedding in Davao

DAVAO CITY—Defeated presidential candidate Fernando Poe Jr. did not show up at a Muslim royal wedding here yesterday, an event which President Macapagal-Arroyo attended.

Poe and the President were among the principal sponsors at the nuptials of Vice Mayor Madzhar Loong of Parang, Sulu and Mely Ann Pendatun Paglas, the daughter of Datu Ibrahim Paglas III.

The senior Paglas, who campaigned hard in Maguindanao for Poe's candidacy in the May presidential elections, said he intentionally invited the rival candidates "in the spirit of reconciliation" but the actor had declined.

He said Poe, who is pursuing an election protest against Ms Arroyo's proclamation, was simply not available.

Former senator Loren Legarda, Poe's running mate in May, showed up at the wedding which was held at the Waterfront Insular hotel here.

Asked if she was surprised at the President's presence at the wedding of a daughter of a staunch opposition supporter, Legarda said she had always known that Ms Arroyo would be going.

She said she was not intimidated by the President's presence. After all, they have been friends for a long time and she even became the President's "kumare" when she stood as sponsor at the 2002 wedding of Mike Arroyo, the President's eldest son, Legarda said.

Legarda was seen briefly talking to the President during the ceremonies.

Other government officials who stood as sponsors were Secretary Jesus Dureza, the presidential assistant for Mindanao; Secretary Luis Lorenzo, presidential adviser on job generation and chair of the Land Bank of the Philippines and Quedancor; Parouk Hussin, governor of the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao; Davao City Mayor Rodrigo Duterte and local political leaders identified with the administration and the opposition.

The President's visit here yesterday was mainly for the opening of the "Wow Mindanao Exposition" organized by the Department of Tourism and top Mindanao leaders.

She also met with officials of the Mindanao Economic Development Council (Medco), an attached agency of the Office of the President, to discuss the Mindanao investment program.

Ms Arroyo was to spend the night in the city and return to the capital today.

Ignore media, Soliman tells HR experts

BAGUIO CITY—Social Welfare Secretary Corazon "Dinky" Soliman yesterday asked the country's top human resources experts to ignore media reports about the poor state of the economy, saying they only obstruct efforts to unite business and government in solving the fiscal crisis.

"Common ground is difficult to find, especially if one allows [the] media to dictate one's perspective on a daily basis where the norm is to crunch out depressing news one after the other," Soliman told the 41st annual conference here of the Personnel Management Association of the Philippines (PMAAP).

She asked the human resource experts to help guide initiatives designed to merge government and business resources in poverty reduction.

"We need to encourage and nurture problem solvers" instead of the unending stream of "complainers who think we will never make it," she said.

Soliman said efforts should be made to find the common ground that exists among Filipinos, instead of drawing lines of divisions on grounds of culture, economics, politics and social status.

She said that when these differences are highlighted to cause conflicts and violence, "increasing numbers of people join the ranks of [the] poor because the economies of the world are terrorized by these divisions." Vincent Cabresca, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Bill seeks to punish editors who refuse to print or air reply

A CONGRESSMAN from Northern Samar has filed a bill seeking to punish editors and publishers of newspapers and radio and television station managers who refuse to air or print the reply of those accused of alleged wrongdoing in their reports.

While the Constitution guarantees freedom of expression, freedom of the press and freedom of speech, a person alleged to have committed wrongdoing in print or on air should have the correlative right to rebut the accusation in the same forum, said Rep. Romualdo Vicencio who filed House Bill No. 2672.

Vicencio said he has observed that the subjects of such articles and broadcast reports were seldom given an equal chance to defend themselves or clarify the issue affecting them.

"Media has the power to influence perception of the public, providing the thrust that mold public opinion," Vicencio said in a press statement. He noted that media can "make or break a person."

In his bill, Vicencio proposed that the editor-in-chief and publisher or the station manager of a radio or television station who refuse to air the reply of the subjects of such reports should be fined P10,000 for the first offense, P20,000 for the second offense, and P30,000 with a jail term of not more than 30 days for the third offense. Register exotic pets, animal lovers told

THE IDLE iguana in your living room must go out and be counted. Your slithering python, too, can't slip out of this census.

The Department of Environment and Natural Resources has called on the owners of "wildlife pets" to register their animals with the agency between Oct. 11 and Dec. 9.

Failure to do so could mean seizure of their pets by the DENR. Worse, uncooperative pet keepers could face arrest—and end up being the ones caged instead.

Environment Secretary Michael Defensor issued an administrative order on Thursday allowing the "60-day reprieve"—an amnesty period for those unaware of the restrictions on wildlife ownership and trade under Republic Act 9147.

Known as the Wildlife Resources Conservation and Protection Act, the law was signed by President Macapagal-Arroyo on July 30, 2001. It requires, among other things, that the government keep a record of wildlife species under the care of private individuals or business establishments.

The records system covers both exotic (imported) or indigenous pets, regardless of whether the animal is on the endangered list or not. Such pets range from lizards, snakes, birds, to turtles, primates, monkeys, tigers and even crocodiles.

The registration can be done at any DENR office nationwide, Defensor said. Volt Contreras

"There is the Philippine Animal Welfare Act which states that any form of cruelty shall be penalized even if the transporter has obtained a permit from the director of the Bureau of Animal Industry. Cruelty in transporting includes overcrowding, placing of animals in the trunk or under the hood of vehicles," she says.

Caring for wildlife

Jackie, mother of four and grandmother of six, first came to the Philippines in 1980 with her husband Jean de Biolley, an engineer assigned in Leyte.

When her husband's contract was over, they went back to Belgium. In 1990, Jackie became a widow. In 1998, she went back to the Philippines where she decided to live in Palawan because "she fell in love with the place and its wildlife."

In 2000, Jackie, together with Filipino and Belgian friends founded the Palawan Animal Welfare Association (Pawa) to rehabilitate wildlife seized from poachers in the island and to return them to their natural habitat.

At present, there are 50 Pawa members who live in Belgium and 10 Filipino members.

At the beginning, the group worked on easing the suffering of animals in Puerto Princesa. Later, they started rescuing stray animals, assisting the city pound, and ensuring that carabaos were treated well during shipment.

In 2001, Jackie started a new project to rescue the carabaos. She wrote letters to the Department of Agriculture asking them to establish a sanctuary for retired carabaos so they did not have to be sent to the slaughterhouse.

Pawa scored a victory when the Carabao Protection Ordinance of the province of Palawan was signed. This law protects the population of carabaos as well as their proper shipment. Jackie acknowledges Vice Governor David Ponce de Leon for authoring the ordinance.

Adopt-a-carabao

She also started an adoption program for rescued carabaos bound for the slaughterhouse. With funds from its Belgian members, Pawa would purchase the animal, put it up for adoption with farmers as common takers.

"We know we cannot save all the carabaos from the slaughterhouse," Jackie says, "but each rescued animal is a victory for our cause."

They had already rescued 10 carabaos, which have been adopted.

Jackie regularly visits the carabaos in their new homes to make sure they are treated well.

They also plan to establish a sanctuary for carabaos that are no longer qualified for adoption.

Pawa oversees that carabaos for slaughter are at the right age. Males should not be less than 7 years old and females should not be less than 11 years old.

City pound

As for the rest of the animal population, Jackie has created an adoption program for dogs and has started a campaign of sterilization and castration to humanely regulate the population of dogs and cats in Palawan.

Pawa, with funding from the World Society for the Protection of Animals, UK, also worked for the recent renovation of the Puerto Princesa dog pound.

Pawa also has a mobile clinic—a two cage-trailer pulled by a motorbike for the transport of small animals. Jackie and volunteer vets go on short trips to sterilize animals for free, or to visit dogs they had rescued, rehabilitated and found new homes for.

First cat house

Jackie has set up what could probably be the first cattery in the country. This is a screened-off area in her yard, where she keeps feral cats or strays after they have been sterilized. They stay for a day or two, and when they have recovered, she sets them free.

Mass spaying and neutering of dogs and cats is clearly a pet project.

"Aside from keeping the overpopulation of strays under control, it will help reduce the spread of rabies," she says, adding: "The city administration has kindly supported my activities. We are working together amiably for the welfare of the animals."

Company she keeps

Jackie says that she prefers the company of animals to people. In fact, she lives in a modest home in Barangay Irawan, Puerto Princesa with three dogs, two cats, and seven chickens.

She has a good friend—Nita Lichauco, president of the Manila-based Philippine Animal Welfare Society, who herself lives with more than a dozen dogs and cats.

The 6th Children's Rosary Rally October 2, 2004

"Loving Jesus with Mary for Peace and Unity"

Today, children all across the nation will become one in praying for peace and unity in the country and the whole world, together with their bishops, priests, parents and teachers. Overseas families in 60 countries have been invited to join them. Children will gather in their respective parishes from 10:30 am to 12 noon to simultaneously pray the Holy Rosary and celebrate the Holy Eucharist.

This year, the Children's Rosary Rally coincides with the Feast of the Holy Guardian Angels and the National Eucharistic Marian Year.

The Children's Rosary Rally at Mary, Queen of Peace Shrine (EDSA Shrine) will be aired together with a video presentation on ABS-CBN ANC channel 21 today, from 4 pm to 5 pm.

Eucharistic and Marian Year Prayer

Lord Jesus Christ,
We solemnly inaugurate today a year of grace.
A year we dedicate to the Holy Eucharist
And to the Blessed Virgin Mary, Your Mother.
We need to experience as a nation
The transforming power of the Eucharist
And the loving care of Mary, our Mother.
For we are a wounded people,
Wounded by political conflicts and tribal wars,
Wounded by unjust socio-economic divisions,
Wounded by corruption and moral degeneration.

Lord Jesus Christ,
As often as we celebrate the Holy Eucharist,
We remember how much You love us,
Let the Eucharist help us to work together as a people.

So that in every home, barangay, town and city
All may live in a culture of peace, unity and renewal.
May the prayer of Mary, our Mother, accompany us
As we journey together in this year of grace
Toward national healing and reconciliation.

Lord Jesus Christ,
We believe in the transforming power of the Eucharist
And we trust in the loving care of Mary, our Mother.
Grant them in Your tender mercy
What we ask for in faith, hope and love. Amen.

Our Lady of Guadalupe, pray for us.
Saint Lorenzo Ruiz, pray for us.
That in all things, God may be glorified.

er than five seconds, it is safe to eat.

The annual awards, presented at Harvard University in Massachusetts by the publishers of the Annals of Improbable Research, are a spoof of the Nobel prizes and represent years of scouring scholarly journals and newspapers for scientific efforts worth poking fun at.

Jim Gundlach of the University of Alabama said he got hate mail when he first published his study showing that people who listen to country music have higher rates of suicide.

He said it does not hold true any more.

"The country music that we have today is not the same kind of country music that was related to suicide back when we did this," he said in a telephone interview.

He said the findings, published in 1992, surprised him too.

Jillian Clarke was a Chicago high school student when she investigated the "5-second rule" that states if food falls to the floor for fewer than 5 seconds, it is safe to pick it up and eat it.

She found, in a survey, that 76 percent of US women and 56 percent of men were familiar with the 5-second rule, and used it to justify picking up and eating dropped treats, or letting their children do so.

Clarke swabbed floors at the University of Illinois and found them surprisingly clean of microbes, thus justifying the rule.

Hair style

Frank Smith of Orlando, Florida, won his engineering IgNobel posthumously for patenting his peculiar comb-over—a way of covering up a bald spot with hair.

"He actually had a diagram and a science to the method that he used," Smith's granddaughter, Heather Smith Adams, said in a telephone interview.

"There was a specific pattern—you had to grow out your hair to a particular length and there was an actual pattern for how you laid the hair over one side and then combed it over to the other side," added Smith.

"You know how combovers have that stringy look? This is to avoid that stringy look. I didn't know for a long time that he even had a combover."

A chemistry IgNobel went to Coca-Cola Company of Britain "for using advanced technology to convert liquid from the River Thames into Dasani, a transparent form of water, which for precautionary reasons has been made unavailable to consumers."

Five hundred thousand bottles of the product were pulled from the market last March after unacceptable levels of bromate, a potential cancer-causing chemical, were found. Coke is seeking a new British bottling location. Reuters

New garden units now being offered at Serendra.

Maybe it's the wide expanses of greenery. Maybe it's the meticulously designed, pan-culturally inspired low to mid rise residential units. Or maybe it's the marriage of these two things to create an oasis of serenity mere minutes away from the Makati Central Business District. Any which way though, what is clear is that more and more people are refusing to compromise accessibility and comfort when it comes to their homes. This can be seen plainly in the rapid sale of the garden units in Serendra Section A.

To capitalize on this demand, Ayala Land, Inc. is making sure that the soon to be launched new sections of Serendra will have as many garden-view units as possible. In addition, selected units will have unique features like wrap-around views, full-height glass in the master's bedroom, and even more spacious balconies.

Unlike other residential projects that seek to squeeze as many units as possible, Serendra is a one-of-a-kind residential community that offers residents room to breathe, walk, run, dance, love, and live.

With about 65% of its 12 hectares devoted to greenery, Serendra offers quick relief from city life without having to leave the city.

Serendra is a unique hybrid of house and condo nestled in lush gardens, numerous walkways, wading pools, and play areas. It's more than a place to settle down. It's an ideal venue for a family to take root.

Allow yourself to get away from it all, if only for awhile. Visit the Serendra Pavilion at the 26th St. Bonifacio Global City, Taguig, Metro Manila.

You may also call 848-5000, or email serendra@ayalaland.com.ph for inquiries.

Chilled drinks and warm laughter by the poolside. Moonlit strolls along cobblestone walks. The serenade of the breeze through the trees as you held hands. Postcard perfect moments all. GSIS chief got P11-M housing loan in 2 days practical than renting one in Metro Manila.

Sen. Ramon Magsaysay Jr. called on Garcia to step down in view of the "massive unrest" over the GSIS supposed failure to meet the requirements of government employees.

Magsaysay called on President Macapagal-Arroyo to let Garcia go "and heed the call of the 1.5 million-strong government workforce who have suffered long enough."

Palace for the defense

But Malacañang said the GSIS chief had so far done well in explaining his side on the controversies that the President wanted him to tackle point by point.

"Based on what we heard, and as far as these allegations [on the electronic card bidding won by Union Bank of the Philippines] are concerned, he has explained very well his side, especially with the help of his assistants. I think what he needs to do is continue to answer all questions hurled [at] him," Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye told dzMM radio.

Bunye said the GSIS had been performing well: "[Its] income under Garcia is bigger compared to other administrations. We also heard from his assistants about the many projects undertaken during his term."

Nevertheless, Bunye stressed that Malacañang was not out to defend Garcia and that Ms Arroyo had yet to decide on whether he would be retained or replaced.

Not more than 5

Garcia said that with the pay cut he imposed on himself following the controversy over the salaries and perks of government "fat cats," he now had to take his P100,000 monthly loan payments from his "other sources" of income.

"Our housing loan [process] takes not more than five days. In fact, we ran an advertisement for that [as early as] 2002," he said.

Garcia said the GSIS had also lifted the ceiling for housing loans so long as the net pay and collateral of members made them viable for a loan application.

But Courage president Ferdinand Gaité continued to allege abuse of authority on the part of Garcia.

"GSIS members have suffered so much under Garcia's management of the pension fund. Without any increase in our salary, he implemented an increase in our monthly contribution from 9 percent to 12 percent," Gaité said.

He said Garcia further limited the benefits of GSIS members by implementing such policies as the premium-based policy.

"[His housing loan], even if he claims that it was done through regular GSIS channels and procedures, is still repugnant and irregular in as much as most of the members are having problems acquiring loans that are much smaller," Gaité said.

But Garcia said: "These people from Courage think that once they are able to borrow, they no longer need to pay [the GSIS]."

He said all members could get their just benefits from the GSIS if their premium payments were in order and they had no outstanding loan balance.

Support

Garcia has secured the support of a moderate group of government workers, a faction of the KMG, as well as the former members of the GSIS board of trustees including Leonora Vasquez-de Jesus, head of the Presidential Management Staff under President Joseph Estrada.

Robert Ibasco, speaker of the Joint Legislative-Executive Assembly of the KMG, said KMG president Albert Velasco was not authorized to lead any mass action or file cases against Garcia.

Florito Ibañez, president of the Confederation of Government Employees' Organizations, issued a statement urging all government unions, associations and societies "to observe sobriety, civility and fair play."

Ibañez cited the reform programs introduced in the GSIS "which are designed to provide greater financial benefits and assistance to government employees and retirees."

The former GSIS trustees—former Justice Hermogenes Concepcion Jr., Fulgencio Factoran, Aida Nocete, Ellenita Martinez, De Jesus and Ibañez—whose terms expired only on Aug. 30, said in a statement: "We are confident that because of the very able and competent management of the system during the last three years, GSIS' viability and financial strength have been assured well into the future."

CHR case

But Courage members yesterday filed a case against Garcia before the Commission on Human Rights in connection with the violent dispersal of their protest rally at the GSIS Main Office in Pasay City on Sept. 28.

Gaité said that aside from the serious physical injuries that Courage members suffered, Garcia violated BP 880, or the law prohibiting the use of water cannons and tear gas during rallies.

"We will not allow Garcia's reign of terror and greed at the GSIS to persist," Gaité said. "At the Ombudsman, the CHR, the courts and in the streets, we will make sure that he is pinned down for his crimes against government employees."

The Department of Education employees' union also said public school teachers were being shabbily treated by Garcia.

"The ones worst hit by [his] incompetence are our public school teachers because they can't take out a loan anymore. They're coming all the way here to complain," said Domingo Alidon, president of the DepEd National Employees Union.

Alidon said they raised their complaints over a year ago but that the GSIS only took notice early this year.

He said the GSIS might have continued to ignore them if not for the May elections, wherein the teachers served as poll inspectors.

Service records a mess

"The elections have passed and until now our service records [with the GSIS] are still a mess," Alidon said.

With about 500,000 public school teachers and non-teaching personnel and an annual contribution of about P12 billion, the DepEd is the GSIS' biggest client group.

DepEd employees have demanded Garcia's resignation for allowing employee service records to deteriorate.

Their chief complaints are that the GSIS did not record their loan payments so that now they could not take out a new loan; that it had made a mess of their records; and that employees were not getting their policy contract despite the maturity of their insurance policy. GMA photog survives Cebu dive accident

By Jhunnet Napailacan
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—A Malacañang photographer came close to drowning after taking underwater shots of President Macapagal-Arroyo scuba diving off the resort town of Moalboal around 89 km southwest of this city.

Jerry Carual, a photographer with the Office of the President, yesterday said that the mishap occurred between 1 and 2 p.m. on Thursday and that he was unconscious for 3-5 minutes.

Ms Arroyo, who inspected several project sites in southern Cebu on Wednesday, spent private time in Moalboal on Thursday. But Cebu Gov. Gwendolyn Garcia, who joined her and other national officials in the scuba diving activity, said she was not aware that a Malacañang photographer had been hurt.

Carual said he had to resurface after 45 minutes underwater because his oxygen tank was almost empty. He said that because he went underwater before the President did, he should also have been the first to resurface.

But he was hit by strong waves the moment he resurfaced, Carual said. He said he felt very tired and thought of unstrapping the oxygen tank from his back to use it for floating.

Carual said he had taken in some seawater and was struggling against the strong waves when he lost consciousness.

He was in the Coast Guard vessel named MV Pampanga when he came to.

Carual said he learned that it was the President's close-in security, Sgt. Christian Balajadia, who had taken him aboard a speedboat and then transferred him to the Coast guard vessel.

He said he was put in the MV Pampanga's decompression chamber for five hours, or from 2 to 7 p.m., and was under the care of a certain Doctor Gueb.

He will fly back to Manila tomorrow.

DOJ rules out amnesty

vice-connected, but rather absorbed and in furtherance of the alleged crime of coup d'état."

He said that, under the law, soldiers could be court-martialed only after a civilian court had ruled that their alleged crime was service-connected.

More than 300 soldiers were originally charged with coup d'état. The DOJ, however, conducted another preliminary investigation and cleared 290. The Makati RTC subsequently dismissed the charges against the 290 for lack of evidence.

In March, the Supreme Court also issued a status quo order stopping court-martial proceedings against the 290 soldiers.

In a new statement yesterday, Bunye said: "Our unity and reconciliation efforts are premised on the principle of justice. Laws were violated and the military chain of command was breached by the mutiny and the officers themselves have expressed unconditional readiness to face the consequences of their actions."

Leniency

Bunye added: "At this point, what the President has offered as a healing measure is greater leniency for those who were misled by their superior into joining the mutiny. Discussions on other conciliatory measures are premature."

Bunye took pains to stress that the idea of giving amnesty to the Magdalo mutineers never came from Malacañang.

Speaking in Filipino, Bunye said: "You know, the amnesty proposal did not come from Malacañang, not from the President. It came from other sources—some members of Congress, some officials but it did not come from Malacañang."

"That is why it is not accurate to say Malacañang changed its decision with regard to amnesty because it truly was not discussed [during the President's meeting with the Magdalo officers]," Bunye said.

Trillanes' woes

Bunye said that during the closed-door meeting between Ms Arroyo and the Magdalo leaders, the officers asserted their willingness to face the consequences of their mutiny and Ms Arroyo had thanked them for that.

"But she said that the proceedings against the Magdalo officers will continue although their followers can count on leniency because they merely followed their officers," Bunye said in a dzBB interview.

"The cases against them must be concluded and we will wait for the results," Bunye said.

The bloodless mutiny fizzled out in less than 24 hours when the soldiers failed to rally support from the rest of the Armed Forces.

In spite his apology to Ms Arroyo, Navy Lt. Senior Grade Anro-

nio Trillanes IV, a leader of the mutiny, will have to face graft charges filed against him last year by the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG), Assistant Ombudsman Ernesto Nocos told the INQUIRER.

Case must go on

In a telephone interview, Nocos said that even in the remote possibility that Trillanes and five other officers involved in the failed coup were granted amnesty, the criminal complaint against him would remain.

"The apology is one thing, the evidence for criminal allegation is another thing," said Nocos.

"The case must go on. We have to bring the case to its rightful conclusion. The Ombudsman will not go slow on the investigation of the case [even if] he had apologized," he said.

Percival Antolin Rumbaoa, CIDG operative, has charged Trillanes with graft for allegedly failing to submit his statement of assets and liabilities for year 2001 and 2002 and acquiring vehicles and property in excess of the income of a Navy officer of his rank.

"The case filed with us will go on based on evidence," he said.

Trillanes airs his side

In a nine-page defense he submitted to the Ombudsman earlier this year, Trillanes admitted failing to submit his statement of assets and liabilities for the years 2001 and 2002, but he blamed the officials of the Bonifacio Naval Station for failing to "direct me to file my SAL."

In those years, he said, he was taking up a masteral course in public administration at the University of the Philippines.

He also admitted having a Nissan Terrano but said he acquired this on May 2, 2002 and not Jan. 1, 1996, as claimed by Rumbaoa, who reportedly submitted papers not authenticated by the Land Transportation Office.

Thus, Trillanes said, he was not obliged to declare it in his SAL earlier than the purchase date.

Besides, Trillanes said, the car was co-owned by him and his wife Arlene—an administrative officer of the Philippine Military Academy—who declared it in her SAL.

'Fabrication'

As to his alleged ownership of a 2001 Mitsubishi Pajero, Trillanes said this could have only been a product of "fabrication."

Trillanes also denied owning a motorcycle and said the vehicles in his possession were obtained "through my personal industry and soft loans from my family."

Trillanes denied there was any conflict of interest in his having been an incorporator in the FYI Research and Consulting Group Inc. since he became an incorporator "when I was on my study leave."

Senators scold clueless cops over cell phone thefts fight phone thieves if they did not have a good monitoring system of the crime.

"I'm surprised you do not give much attention to the most common crime problem now. You don't have enough statistics, you don't have much knowledge about it," said Sen. Manuel Villar Jr., committee chair.

Villar, along with Senators Rodolfo Biazon, Juan Ponce Enrile and Jinggoy Estrada, questioned the figures presented by Chief Supt. Wilfredo Dulay, deputy director of the Philippine National Police Directorate for Investigation and Detective Management.

Dulay, who represented PNP Director General Edgar Aglipay at the hearing, said that based on police records, the volume of street crimes from March to August dropped to 14.4 percent compared to the same period last year. And of the total number of street crimes, he said, 31 percent were cases of robbery, and 11.5 percent, of theft.

Biazon said Dulay should have presented figures covering a 10-year period to allow the senators to determine whether the trend in street crimes was increasing or decreasing.

But Dulay said the PNP had just started to collate data on street crimes in 2003. He also said phone snatching incidents nationwide numbered 310 from March to August 2003 and 248 in March to August 2004, prompting the senators to again wonder why the PNP statistics were so low.

The lawmakers were likewise annoyed when Dulay said the PNP had no data on the number of stolen cell phones it had recovered or how many deaths had resulted from phone robbery.

Most vibrant industry

Responding to the question of how many cell phones had been reported stolen to Smart Communications, lawyer Enrico Español gave no figure but said that based on the reported losses, there had been an increase.

Villar retorted that an increase in the number was "logical" given the growing number of users. "The telecom industry is the most vibrant one now," he noted.

He told Dulay he could not believe that the PNP was not giving much attention to cell phone theft. "You can't address the problem of street crimes if you are not monitoring it," he said.

The senators' annoyance deepened when Chief Supt. Prospero Noble of the PNP National Capital Region office presented a varying figure.

Noble said phone thefts numbered 332 from January to August, and that many of the incidents happened in Quezon City and the other cities of Manila, Pasay and Calocan.

The senators wondered why Noble's figure was higher than Dulay's. They were then told that victims were referred to the National Telecommunications Commission (NTC) to have their stolen phones blocked.

Half a million

NTC Commissioner Ronald Solis said the agency received complaints of 25,492 phones lost or stolen in 2002; 16,954 in 2003; and 9,247 from January to September.

Asked by Villar to explain the drop in the number of phones stolen or lost, Solis said he could not say that the figures did indicate a drop. "It's possible that people are just not reporting it," he said.

Jun Lozada, executive director/founder of the Organisasyon ng mga Galit sa Magnanakaw (OGSM), told the committee that half a million phones were stolen nationwide every year.

Lozada said the OGSM made the estimate after monitoring that only 5 percent of the victims reported losing their phones to thieves. It surmised that the 25,000 victims who reported theft in 2002, made up this 5 percent.

He said the half million phones stolen annually in the country was not surprising given the United Kingdom's reported 700,000 cases every year.

Later, Lozada told reporters: "If there is any group that can do something about this, it's the mobile phone companies, not the police."

He said a law was needed to "force" mobile phone companies to act on the problem.

Lozada said phone theft was an "opportunistic" crime—meaning thieves did not necessarily plan to steal a phone but just took the opportunity when it came.

He said this was clear in the fact that many of the victims were women (72 percent) and children (8 percent).

Villanueva

The hearing also took up the case of Jose Villanueva of Today newspaper, who last week resisted holdup men who demanded his phone and was stabbed to death.

PNP officials said three suspects had been arrested. They said it could not have been a spur-of-the-moment crime because the suspects had previous criminal records.

The Senate resolution filed by Villar that called for an inquiry into cell phone theft took into account the fact that people were being killed for resisting thieves.

Villanueva's father, Luis, attended the hearing on the committee's invitation but did not speak.

US forces storm Samarra, kill 94; Iraq mourns 34 kids

SAMARRA, Iraq—The US military said 94 insurgents were killed on Friday as its troops and Iraqi forces thrust into Samarra town in a first effort to reclaim troublespots before Iraq's planned elections, while a shocked nation buried 34 children killed by car bombs.

In the United States, President George W. Bush and challenger John Kerry held their first pre-election debate before the Nov. 2 ballot, with Kerry terming the invasion of Iraq "a colossal error" and Bush reiterating "The world is better off without Saddam Hussein."

Some instant polls straight after said Kerry had beaten the president. A Gallup poll for CNN gave Kerry a 46 percent to 37 percent win over Bush.

Iraq's hostage saga showed no letup, with Jakarta confirming on Friday that two Indonesian women were among the 10 latest people to be kidnapped. Al-Jazeera television said the two were seized alongside six Iraqis and two Lebanese working for an electronic equipment firm.

In the aftermath of Thursday car bombings in which the 34 children died, the group of suspected al-Qaida operative Abu Mussab al-Zarqawi claimed, via its website, responsibility for three suicide bombings in Iraq.

The authenticity of the claim on www.ansar.net/ws/vb/ could not be verified.

The Samarra operation, 125 km north of Baghdad, started before dawn, with the US military saying its forces had seized the city hall and police stations.

The offensive followed vows by the interim government to win back swathes of lawless territory in the Sunni Muslim triangle before November to prepare for the January poll.

In response to repeated and unprovoked attacks by anti-Iraqi forces (US military terminology for insurgents), Iraqi Security Forces and Multinational Forces secured the government and police buildings in Samarra... on Oct. 1," the military said.

A US military spokesperson said 94 insurgents had been killed and one wounded. He gave no details of any casualties on the US-led coalition side.

The figure for the wounded contrasted with an earlier statement from a doctor in the town. Dr. Khaled Ahmed at Samarra's main hospital said: "We have received 20 killed and 35 wounded in the fighting."

At least three US soldiers were wounded in the fighting and five insurgents were detained, a military spokesperson said.

The governor of Salaheddin province, where Samarra is located, cautioned on Thursday that fresh fighting risked plunging surrounding towns into violence.

Pope to beatify Mel Gibson's mystic 'muse'

VATICAN CITY—Never one to shrink from criticism, Pope John Paul II is again putting controversial figures on the road to sainthood, including Austria's last emperor and a mystic nun who inspired Mel Gibson's film on Christ's passion.

With Sunday's ceremony in St. Peter's Square, the ailing 84-year-old Roman Catholic leader will have beatified some 1,340 people, more than all his predecessors combined.

The Pope will confer beatification—the last step before Roman Catholic sainthood—on five people on Sunday. The two most controversial could not have been more different.

One was born in a wooden farmhouse with no running water and the other in a castle. But both have ignited as much passion after death as they did in life.

Anne Catherine Emmerick, a sickly German mystic nun who lived from 1774 to 1824, has been called "Mel's Muse." It was her book, "The Dolorous Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ," that gave Gibson some of the most grisly details.

Although Gibson said his hit film "The Passion of the Christ" was true to the Gospels, he clearly turned to what the "Maid of Muenster" saw while gripped in visionary ecstasy.

The episode where Mary mops up her son's blood after his sadistic scourging is pure Emmerick. No Gospel mentions a hooded devil inciting Jews as they demanded Christ's crucifixion or following him as he carried his cross.

Jewish groups condemned the film, saying it would spur new forms of visceral anti-Semitism. They now fear that moving Emmerick closer to the glories of the altars, as sainthood is known, will only make matters worse.

"I think the timing of this is unfortunate and particularly damaging," said Rabbi Gary Bretton-Granatoor, director of inter-faith activities for the Anti-Defamation League.

"Had this happened five or 10 years ago, only those in the know would have noticed. But now, after Gibson's film, Emmerick's anti-Semitic writings have spread to a much wider audience," he said by telephone from New York.

Jewish leaders say the film and Emmerick's new popularity will resurrect decade charges against Jews, which had been officially repudiated by the Second Vatican Council in 1965.

Emmerick was an invalid by the time she was 14 and had the stigmata, the unexplained bleeding of the hands and feet similar to the wounds of the crucified Christ.

The beatification of Karl I, last emperor of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, has caused an uproar in Vienna, with critics denouncing him for his army's use of poison gas during World War One or lampooning him as "the patron saint of losers."

It has also opened the Austrian Church, which has been rocked by a homosexual scandal at a seminary near Vienna, to public ridicule for saying he performed a miracle by healing a Brazilian nun of her varicose veins and leg sores.

Karl, a devout Catholic who mounted the throne in 1916, made futile efforts the following year for peace talks with France.

Forced out at the end of the war in 1918, he went into exile first in Switzerland—from where he twice tried to retake power in Hungary—and then Portugal, where he died in 1922.

Blair faces heart op, vows to lead on LONDON—British Prime Minister Tony Blair went to hospital on Friday to correct recurrent heart palpitations, but he vowed to serve a full, third term in office if he wins an election expected next year.

"I feel fine," Blair told a barrage of reporters as he left his Downing Street home smiling and waving.

Blair's office said the procedure was routine and he would be back at work early next week.

The prime minister has frequently looked haggard in the past 18 months, the toughest of his career with a country divided over war in Iraq and his trust ratings plunging.

In an unprecedented move, Blair set his own departure timetable, saying he would not seek a fourth term in office.

"Do I wish to serve a full term? The answer to that is 'yes'. Do I want to go on and on and on? The answer to that is 'no'," he said. "I wouldn't want to put myself forward at a fourth election, I don't think the country would want me to."

A British election is expected in May next year and polls suggest Blair is odds on to win again.

His party won a crucial parliamentary election on Friday in Hartlepool, northeast England, with a much reduced majority.

Blair's main Conservative opponents were beaten into a humiliating fourth place by a fringe party that advocates withdrawal from the European Union. Analysts said they looked in no shape to challenge the prime minister next year.

"The one party people are singly not voting for in large numbers is the Conservative party. That is the central fact of British politics at the moment," said Anthony King, professor of politics at Essex University.

Blair, 51, had heart palpitations late last year and suffered a "mild recurrence" in August, his office said. He will stay in hospital overnight, rest over the weekend and be back to work next week—for a schedule that includes a trip to Africa.

"I've got this routine procedure on my heart which is connected with the type of thing that happened last year," Blair told television networks. "It's not particularly alarming but it's something you should just get fixed."

Blair insisted he would not leave the political stage any time soon may be tough news for his powerful finance minister Gordon Brown, long hungry for the top job in government.

But analysts said Blair might eventually become a lame duck leader and quit sooner.

Blair said Brown would make a "superb" leader whose chances of leadership would be unharmed if the incumbent hung on for another term. "I don't think it rules Gordon out in any shape or form at all," he said.

Rumors have circulated for years that Blair and Brown struck a deal he would one day stand aside for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. But Brown supporters expected their man to be in charge well before the timetable Blair has now spelled out.

This year, Blair has sometimes looked weary and drawn as the relentless pressure of justifying his decision to go to war in Iraq, and the violent aftermath, took its toll.

Earlier this year there were even rumors that he had considered standing down, something he has since firmly denied.

Blair's cardiologist, Punit Ramrakha, said the procedure—the technical term for which is catheter ablation—was low risk. It does not amount to full surgery and will be carried out under local anesthetic.

"The recovery time is short, with patients able to return to work and undertake full activities within two to three days," he said.

Analysts said Blair's pledge had reinforced his position in the short-term but he might have difficulty serving until 2009, the likely time of the election after next, with a looming leadership change overshadowing his final years in power.

"I think he would become a progressively lammer duck towards the end of the third term," Peter Keilner, chairman of pollsters YouGov told Reuters. "I would expect him to resign well before the end of the next term."

Gaza's bloodiest day

JABALYA, Gaza—Twenty-eight Palestinians and three Israelis were killed on Thursday. Gaza's bloodiest day in four years of conflict, as Israel's army struck back after a rocket attack killed two Israeli children at a border town. Prime Minister Ariel Sharon approved an intensified offensive to re-occupy Palestinian-run parts of northern Gaza and stop rocket firing that has persisted despite raids and given fuel to critics of his plan to relinquish the territory. In the deadliest incident of the spiraling violence, an Israeli tank shell killed seven Palestinians near a school in Jabalya, Gaza's largest refugee camp, as Israeli forces thrust deep into the militant stronghold for the first time. Israeli troops including northern Gaza killed 21 other people, including militants and bystanders. Medics said about 150 Palestinians were wounded. Earlier on Thursday, gunmen ambushed and killed two Israeli soldiers and a woman out jogging. A Hamas rocket attack on the southern Israeli town of Sderot on Wednesday killed two Israeli children, aged 2 and 4, visiting their grandparents on the eve of the Jewish festival of Sukkot.

Hostages in Iraq

JAKARTA—Two Indonesian women working for a British company in Iraq were among 10 people kidnapped by an Islamic militant group, officials in Jakarta confirmed Friday. Indonesian foreign ministry officials said the women, who were pictured wearing Muslim headscarves in video shot by the militants and aired on Arabic television, were from Jakarta. "They are Indonesians," spokesperson Marty Natalegawa said. Senior foreign ministry official Ferry Adamhar confirmed the women's identities as Rosidah and Rafikan. Adamhar told Elshinta radio that the women were working for a British company but it was not known in what capacity. The Indonesian women were captured alongside six Iraqis and two Lebanese working for an electrical equipment firm, Al-Jazeera television said. Four of the presumed captives, all men, were shown in the video, with the captors pointing machine-guns at them. The channel later aired more footage showing the two women.

Jakarta bomber named

JAKARTA—Indonesian police on Friday announced a breakthrough in the hunt for militants behind last month's attack on the Australian Embassy in Jakarta, naming the suicide bomber who delivered the deadly blast. Police chief Da Bachtiar said DNA tests comparing samples found at the scene of the blast with traces and blood from suspects families confirmed the bomber's identity as Heri Kurniawan, alias Ghufron. "We have a very strong conviction that this person carried the bomb and died in the explosion," Bachtiar told reporters. Nine other people were killed and more than 180 were injured in the Sept. 9 attack, which has been blamed on the al-Qaida-linked Jemaah Islamiyah group.

EU immigrant camps

SCHEVENINGEN, Netherlands—European Union justice and interior ministers on Friday weighed a contentious proposal to set up immigrant processing camps outside Europe—a program Germany said was necessary to weed out illegal immigrants from legitimate asylum seekers. German interior Minister Otto Schily was outlining the proposal to create transit centers in North Africa and elsewhere on foreign soil. "We need to think about preventing illegal immigration more forcefully," Schily told reporters Thursday, but refused to elaborate on his proposal before briefing his EU colleagues. "We either can wait until the problems come to Europe or we go actively after the problems and try to solve them. I am for the latter." The debate over the camps dominated two days of talks on how European Union nations can cooperate to come up with common policies on immigration and asylum.

Docs examine Pinochet

SANTIAGO, Chile—Three court-appointed doctors examined Chile's former military dictator Augusto Pinochet on Thursday, a key step that will decide whether the 88-year-old general will stand trial for human rights abuses. The doctors' reports, due by Oct. 8, will assess Pinochet's mental health and will be used by an investigating judge to decide whether to indict him in one specific case. "The exams took place in the best way possible and with maximum transparency and we are waiting for the reports," Juan Guzman, a human rights judge, told reporters. Guzman is probing Pinochet's role in 18 deaths in the 1970s under Operation Condor, an intelligence-sharing network of South American military regimes who helped each other hunt down dissidents.

Russia delivers crucial nod to Kyoto

MOSCOW—The Russian government approved the Kyoto Protocol on Thursday, giving decisive support to the long-delayed, climate change treaty that should allow it to come into force worldwide.

President Vladimir Putin's cabinet decided to send the 1997 UN pact to the State Duma lower house, dominated by Kremlin supporters, for ratification. Opponents maintained it would harm the economy and do little to protect the environment.

Victorious backers of Kyoto, which orders cuts in greenhouse gas emissions to slow global warming, made clear they believed it would have no effect on the environment or the economy and that the decision was politically motivated.

The European Union hailed Moscow's decision and seized the moment to urge Washington, whose rejection of the pact in 2001 left it dependent on Russia's approval, to rethink its position.

"The fate of the Kyoto protocol depends on Russia. If we... rejected ratification, we would become the ones to blame (for its failure)," Deputy Foreign Minister Yuri Fedotov told the Cabinet meeting.

A UN spokesperson said Secretary General Kofi Annan welcomed the Russian move and "takes this occasion to remind the entire international community of the need to bring a greater sense of urgency to this crucial issue of human security and well-being."

Russia, which accounts for 17 percent of world emissions, has held the key to Kyoto's success since the US pullout.

Kyoto becomes binding once it has been ratified by 55 percent of the signatories, which must altogether account for 55 percent of developed countries' carbon dioxide emissions.

The pact, so far ratified by 122 nations, has met the first condition. But they account for only 44 percent of emissions.

Russia initially prevaricated on ratification. But in May Putin backed it in exchange for EU agreement on the terms of Moscow's admission to the World Trade Organization. "We warmly welcome the decision," a European Commission spokesperson said in Brussels. He added that the EU was encouraging Washington to review its attitude to the pact.

Environmentalists and experts were equally positive.

"Now he (Putin) can go down in history as the savior (of Kyoto)," said Benito Mueller, an expert for British-based think-tank the Royal Institute for International Affairs.

Thursday's meeting left unanswered the question of when parliament could practically debate ratification. The head of the Duma's international affairs committee, Konstantin Kosachev, suggested that was unlikely before the end of the year.

There is no time limit for the Cabinet to send a ratification request to the Duma, Interfax said. Ministries linked to the environment had been given three months to work out practical measures arising from Russia's obligations.

Proponents of Kyoto say that apart from improving the environment worldwide, the pact would force Russia to upgrade industry to new standards and help it earn billions of dollars selling excess quotas for gas emissions to polluters abroad.

Opponents said Russia would lose out. "The Academy of Science confirms its position that the protocol is not effective and gives us no advantages," the head of the academy's institute on climate change and ecology, Yuri Izrael, told the Cabinet meeting.

Putin's economic adviser Andrei Illarionov warned that new environmental standards would cost industry more and undermine the Kremlin's plan to double gross domestic product in 10 years.

"Many economic calculations show that if the protocol is ratified, the doubling of GDP becomes impossible in the next 10 years," Illarionov said.

But Economic Development Minister German Gref, Illarionov's rival for Putin's ear, said that when making the decision the Cabinet aimed at setting a good international precedent rather than focusing on economic or environmental concerns. Reuters

Terrorism

EVER since the gangland-style murder of Arturo Tabara Sunday at the parking lot of ShoeMart Fairview, everyone from his friends and family to the police has been pointing at the New People's Army as his most likely executioner.

"The killing bore the signature of the NPA," one senior police official was saying. Police investigators noted that EDITORIAL Tabara's assassination was carried out with the same deadly efficiency as the earlier killings of Filemon Lagman and Romulo Kintanar. Like Tabara, both were erstwhile top leaders of the Communist Party of the Philippines until they had a falling out with the rebel group. Another senior police officer said the evidence they had gathered indicated that Tabara was killed by the same group of highly trained assassins that gunned down Kintanar, the former chief of the NPA, in January last year inside a restaurant located a couple of hundred meters from the Quezon City Hall.

Comrades of Tabara accused exiled CPP founder Jose Maria Sison of ordering the killing. "Jose wants to silence dissenters," one of them said. Tabara's wife Veronica said they had been warned that he was in the CPP-NPA's order of battle, which "meant they would punish him with death."

The NPA has not done anything to disabuse the public of such suspicion. Not only has it not denied the accusation, but its spokesperson Gregorio Rosal has admitted that an NPA unit had long been sent out to arrest Tabara so that he could be tried before a "people's court" for numerous offenses "against the people of Negros and Panay and the revolutionary movement." Rosal theorized that Tabara could have been shot to death when the NPA arresting unit sensed that he was "armed and dangerous."

Although Rosal has said he was still waiting for confirmation that the NPA made the hit, his vehement denunciation of Tabara's alleged crimes against the people and the CPP already sounds like an admission of guilt. But this time the CPP leadership is no longer gloating. In contrast, Rosal could hardly contain his glee after the Kintanar killing, citing it as an example of "revolutionary justice." Then he boasted that "all traitors to the revolution cannot escape from retribution; sooner or later every traitor will pay for his blood debts to the people and the revolution."

Why the restraint and the seeming reluctance to admit responsibility for Tabara's killing? Why the lame attempt to pass it off as an act of self defense?

If there is anything the CPP leadership wants very badly, it is to have the terrorist tag withdrawn. That action taken by the United States government has not only cut off the pension and other privileges Sison had been getting from the Dutch government but also caused foreign fund contributions to the rebel movement to dry up.

The Tabara killing obviously does not put them closer to that objective. For no matter what he did against the CPP cause, Tabara could hardly be classified as a combatant.

Granted that Tabara had served as a military spy even while he was in the CPP, as Rosal claimed, what about Stephen Ong? What blood debts had he accumulated? Is it now a crime against the people and the revolution to fall in love with a former comrade's daughter?

The 19-year-old Silliman University student was with Tabara when he was shot to death. But his killers cannot claim he was an accidental victim or that his killing was in the nature of collateral damage. He took three bullets to Tabara's two. That was not an accidental death. It was cold-blooded and brutal murder. It was a terrorist act.

Rosal and his comrades here and abroad know it. That is why they cannot come out and claim responsibility for the twin kill outrage.

Coming chaos

AS the Antarctic ice is melting faster, rich countries, the only ones able to undertake efficient measures, including the United States, maintain an attitude of indifference. The reason for this is the high economic cost of reducing greenhouse gas emissions. It was because of this that the United States rejected the Kyoto Protocol.

Meanwhile, rising sea levels threaten the small Pacific Ocean archipelago of Tuvalu, and houses in Alaska built on the melting permafrost are beginning to crack. No big catastrophes are in sight in the short term, but it is certain that chaos in the coming decades can only be avoided if measures are undertaken now.

Even if the United States finally decides to sign the Kyoto Protocol, it will not be enough. Kyoto is already an insufficient answer to a problem much bigger than was feared.

The folly of legislative investigations

NOW that the new Congress has distributed its committee chairs among its favored members, you can expect them to start showing off again in the exercise of their right of legislative investigation. This is now expressly limited by the Constitution, but that is no hindrance to legislators who believe that this power is an opportunity for them to impress their constituents and the public in general. Many of them believe in their supposed abilities (suggested by them) as experienced cross-examiners and feel the people should know about their hidden talent.

The art of cross-examination is something that eludes even the most experienced lawyers as one of them demonstrated at the Estrada impeachment trial when he tried to catch a witness in a lie. The witness was too clever for him, however, and it was he who retreated with his reputation in tatters. But such humiliation does not intimidate our pretentious lawmakers, who believe that their election entitles them to act foolishly in the once august halls of Congress. Thus, you can expect them to ask the most stupid questions, and in the most pompous manner, to the hushed admiration of their bakya admirers.

I do not include all the members of Congress in this observation, for there are indeed a goodly number of them who deserve the respect of the public. But they still constitute a small minority of the generally bungling roster that is a disgrace to the Filipino people. The trouble with the legislature is that all its members have an equal right to speak, even foolishly, and each of them may invoke parliamentary immunity to escape deserved punishment for his (or her) shameful conduct. Their language may be "propesterous," but they are the elect of the people whose voice is, in most cases, described sacrilegiously as the voice of God.

The power of legislative investigation used to be one of the most effective fund-raising schemes of the old Congress, an engine for malice of its less than worthy members, or at the very least, an opportunity for grandstanding. The Constitution now wisely lays down express restrictions to prevent its abuse, to wit, it must be conducted in aid of legislation, in accordance with pre-existing rules of procedure, and with proper respect for those attending or affected by it. Still, the power continues to be exercised with little regard for public sentiment and public funds.

In fairness, some notable legislative investigations have redounded to the public good by exposing and correcting irregularities. A memorable example was the probe of the purchase of the Tambobong-Buenavista estate for which Congress appropriated P400,000 to whom the witness Jean Arnault could not remember paying, he was, for his forgetfulness, held in contempt of the Senate and ordered imprisoned indefinitely until his memory improved. (Whatever happened to him?)

Other investigations have not been as significant or even serious. One recalls with amusement the investigation of the so-called Brunei beauties, the scrape of the NCAA basketball players, the non-admission by a Catholic university of a sexy starlet who made a sensational personal appearance in Congress, and the alleged unhealthy processing of taka. Only recently, Sen. Jinggoy Estrada, chair of the committee on labor employment and human resources, investigated the employment of prostitutes and their congressional customers who had so cheapened the legislature.

While these investigations were taking place, the national economy continued to plummet, peace and order deteriorated, and graft and corruption increased on all levels of the government.

There are two legislative investigations I have followed with keen interest that have produced exactly nothing to date. The first is the Lacson investigation that was begun three years ago and is still on indefinite hold today. The other is the investigation of noise pollution by the airplanes flying over Merville, where I live, and other neighboring subdivisions in Parañaque.

The investigation of Lacson by three Senate committees was concluded on Sept. 5, 2001, and was calendared by majority floor leader Loren Legarda for deliberation by the Senate plenary several times. It was blocked as many times, the last by Sen. Tito Sotto, until Legarda herself joined the opposition. Legarda and Sotto and Sen. Robert Barbers, the chair of the lead investigating committee, are no longer in the Senate, and the Lacson case is now in rigor mortis.

The Blue Ribbon Committee that investigated the intrusion of the noisy airplanes received the solemn promise of the Air Transportation Office to limit their flights between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. daily, but we are still awakened by these nuisances at 5 a.m. or even earlier, and on Sundays too. We have complained to Sen. Joker P. Arroyo, the committee chair, but even he seems to be powerless against the owners of Cebu Pacific and Air Philippines, who must be untouchable. So how about us ordinary citizens of Merville in our besieged and defenseless area? We are expendable.

And so another Congress has begun (and recessed), and the comedy continues.

Asia as well, its performance being more in line with that of Middle Eastern and North African countries (average population growth rate or p.g.r. at 2.4 percent) than with those in East Asia and the Pacific (average 1.2 percent). It is also behaving more like a low-income (average p.g.r. 2.1 percent, lower even than ours) developing country than a middle-income developing country where it is classified (average p.g.r. 1.3 percent).

That our population growth rates did not decelerate in the 1990s—and there is no reason to believe that it has started decelerating in the current decade—clearly reflects the failure of our population policy (if any). As a result, the negative impact of the deepening fiscal crisis has been exacerbated, as illustrated by what is happening in education.

As a percentage of GDP the budget for education has been shrinking, from 2.9 percent in 2001 to 2.3 percent in 2004. The amount allocated has grown in nominal terms, but this has been eaten up by inflation, so that in 2004, the education pie, in real terms, actually contracted (nominal growth rate of 2.9 percent, inflation rate of 4.5 percent, therefore real growth rate of 1.6). With population growing at the rate of 2.4 percent, that means that real per capita expenditures on education have contracted by 4 percent. Which in turn translates into fewer books, equipment, classrooms, teachers, etc., the bottom line being an even poorer quality of education than the one currently obtaining. The long-term implications on the quality of the labor force—and on their income-earning potential—are terrifying.

So, what do mothers and their wishes have to do with all this? Well, the principal source of a fast-growing population is a high total fertility rate (TFR), the number of births per woman. It was 6 births per woman in 1973, 5.1 in 1983, 4.1 in 1993, 3.7 in 1998, and 3.5 percent in 2003—figures which speak for themselves. Again, Philippine TFR is more similar to Middle East and North Africa (3.7 in 1997) than to East Asia and the Pacific (2.1).

But get this: While actual TFR in 1998 was 3.7, what the women wanted, as per the 1998 National Demographic and Health Survey, was 2.7. In other words, if the women had their druthers, they would rather have had one fewer child than they actually had. The 1998 Survey results (the 2003 Survey has not been completely analyzed yet) showed that not only did half (51.4 percent) of women want no more children, but also that of the births in the five years preceding the survey, more than one-fourth (26.9 percent) were not wanted at the time (the women would have preferred that they had been spaced further), and almost one-fifth (18.2 percent) were not wanted at all.

Has the government, has the Catholic Church (it is noteworthy that the imams in this country have issued a fatwah strongly encouraging family planning, including both artificial and natural methods of contraception, focusing on the welfare of mother and child) listened to the women? Obviously not. Not only it seems, are the means for preventing or spacing pregnancies inaccessible to these women, but to add insult to injury, the available methods (or those that are encouraged) are not effective.

This is literally a deadly combination. Maternal mortality rates in the country are four times that of Thailand, and it is estimated that almost one-third of those are abortion-related. Desperate women have to take matters in their own hands, because they get no attention or the wrong kind of attention.

Remember, mothers know best.

Kerry won points in first round

LIKE the rest of the world, I sat up and watched the first of three presidential debates between US candidates George W. Bush and John Kerry. The debate revolved around Iraq and homeland security, over which issue Bush has sprinted ahead in various polls with over 50 points versus 37 points for Kerry. This issue has been conceded by pollsters to Bush, but in the debate, Kerry came across rather strongly, promising to finish the war there, while Bush realistically couldn't put a "deadline" to the pullout of troops. As expected, Bush, as the incumbent, was on the defensive. But he tried to counter by repeatedly hammering on the campaign line that Kerry was indecisive and wishy-washy on the Iraq issue. The world awaits the poll results on that first debate, but I'd say Kerry won points there. The next debate will be tougher for Bush who is lagging behind on the economic issue.

World oil prices rose to a record price $50.47 a barrel last Tuesday and sadly experts don't know at what price it would stabilize. As everyone knows, the world price of oil is affected by a number of events in confluence or alignment in the largest oil-producing countries. Some weeks back, it was the financial woes of Russia's largest oil company, Yukos, that sent prices soaring. This was followed by the flare-up of hostilities in Iraq involving the militant groups there, and the political instability of the rule of President Hugo Chavez in Venezuela. Last Tuesday's record price was attributed to a Nigerian rebel group's demand for a stop to oil production. All these events contribute to the disruption of oil production, which, in turn, leads to higher prices.

A spokesperson of an energy research group abroad was quoted as saying, "The market is much tighter today than it's been since 1973 (when the oil crisis first emerged). Unlike in 1973, 1979 or 1990, the market today is going through a demand shock, not a political shock."

Obviously that demand shock comes from newly industrialized countries such as China and India, which aggravated the traditional high demand at this time for winter stock-piling in the temperate countries. But the spokesperson also said something both revealing and alarming for small countries in Asia such as the Philippines (our oil consumption runs up to between 300,000 and 350,000 barrels a day), whose economies could suffer sharp economic growth cuts if the rise in oil prices were to be sustained. "The market is not thinking long term," he said. "It's thinking day to day." Meaning, supply is dependent on the politically destabilizing events in the oil-producing nations, and there seems to be a new one each day.

Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit called up to thank this columnist for taking up the cudgels for him against Thai Sen. Mechai Viravadiya, who had castigated him and the Arroyo administration for "lacking the will" to distribute condoms to control the spread of AIDS and the burgeoning population. I said Viravadiya ought to go home and confront the terrible situation in his country, where the condom campaign appears to have encouraged even more prostitution. Over a million people are believed to be HIV positive in Thailand, a situation that has alarmed the World Health Organization.

Dayrit stressed that each culture has to be considered. If the wanton distribution of condoms works well for Thailand, as Viravadiya paints it to be, in RP, Dayrit said, such an approach cannot be effective as it's too direct and could go against religious sensibilities. What will work better for our people, he opined, is a multi-sectoral, multi-agency information and education campaign not just about AIDS but also other diseases such as TB, measles, etc. at the barangay level. Dayrit said the Department of Health has been doing this and will push it even more. He recalled that he worked at the barangay level back in the late 1970s as a fresh medical graduate and he's confident he knows it pretty well.

The recent spate of killings of Filipino journalists has caught the attention of international media groups. One of them, the Asia Pacific desk of the Paris-based Reporters Sans Frontiers (Reporters Without Boundaries) opened through its chief, Vincent Brussel, that the murders can be linked to the Philippine political system. Brussel was quoted as saying, "Corruption and the use of violence are unfortunately part of the political game and culture. Local leaders are sometimes linked to the Mafia groups, so they are ready to use the same intimidation techniques." Brussel recommended that Manila strengthen the police and give enough resources to the justice department to be independent, fair and efficient. Good suggestion.

An earlier item here related that during the latter part of the Smokey Mountain hearing where former President Fidel Ramos testified, Sen. Miriam Santiago received a note, perhaps from a media person, informing her of the deadline for stories. She was then seen leaving the room and I quoted someone else's observation that she "converted that exit into a walkout." John Paul Antes, a member of Santiago's staff, denied this, asserting that it was her staff that raised an inquiry with her. He also said the senator's husband, Jun Santiago, was there to support his wife but never set foot on the media center, and that she left the hearing "because she knew that she would not be getting answers from Mr. Ramos responsive to the issues raised." Antes said FVR was "evidently and consistently evasive of the legal questions posed by senators present at the hearing. That the media flocked to follow (Santiago) was incidental."

unsafe day and were willing to risk—or perhaps just willing to push to the back of their minds—the possibility of pregnancy.

Here's what the "FAQ" has to say about couples who practice NFP: These couples, it says, "are found to be more relaxed, comfortable and loving with each other because they do not suffer from shame or loss of self-esteem, nor fear of the failure of the method since they are totally in charge, nor any doubt or suspicion of marital infidelity that has been known to accompany the use of contraceptives or sterilization."

On what were these assertions based? Certainly, couples motivated to use NFP would say they are "relaxed, comfortable and loving," while they're using the method. But how was the comparison made with couples using other modern methods? Judging from my own experience, and the stories women have told me, NFP, precisely because determining an "unsafe" day depends so much on one's interpretation of often ambiguous signs, would tend to cause more anxiety, tension and recrimination than other more convenient methods.

And what proof does the Department of Health have that couples practicing NFP are more faithful or trusting than those using other methods or no methods at all? How can a wife be sure, for instance, that on days of abstinence her husband does not seek solace in the arms of another?

FIDELITY to one's partner isn't determined by the method of family planning you use. Your roving eye will not be quelled by periodic abstinence. And if you're the jealous, possessive type, you'd suspect your spouse of philandering even if you're a stalwart of Couples for Christ. To smear users of modern family planning wholesale as unhappy and frustrated is a slander of such huge proportions I wouldn't be surprised if a class action suit is soon filed against the DOH.

Logic would tell us that a couple for whom the fear of pregnancy is quelled by the use of a safe, reliable and convenient method and are thus more freely able to express their love and desire for each other would be much happier and secure in their relationship than if they worried about the possibility of pregnancy each time they have sex.

Logic would tell us that a family that is of the "right" size—according to the couple's choice and desire, their ability to provide for the children's well-being, the amount of time, effort and loving they can put into child rearing—would be a happier, healthier, more loving family.

And logic would also tell us that if a method of family planning that its promoters claim to be "modern"—that is, it has been scientifically tested and proven to be safe and effective—is truly all it's touted to be, then it can be marketed on its own merits, and need not rely on raising bogeys and making false claims against other methods just to be accepted.

IF this is so, why do NFP counselors, some of whom are on the DOH's payroll, rely so much on scaring women and men against other modern family planning methods as they try to convince them to try NFP? Is it because they know that, once a couple have tried other methods and used them correctly and successfully, they would realize just how unreliable, unpredictable and messy even "modern" NFP can be?

Or maybe that's precisely what NFP promoters have against the other modern contraceptives. They are "too" convenient. They make enjoying sex without fear of pregnancy too easy. Come to think of it, perhaps it's not the "artifice" in the methods that they dislike so much as the "convenience" these methods provide. Sex is all right—as long as it's wrapped in guilt and fear, inconvenience and uncertainty. Easy and enjoyable sex, now that's the real sin.

tion the underemployed. Hasn't anyone wondered if we aren't doing something wrong? If so what can we do to remedy the situation? Or is it too late to avert the dissolution of the Republic?

You can, it seems, trace most of our deficit problems to lousy management in the form of inefficient and poorly targeted government spending. More than 80 percent of the national budget is swallowed up by local government units, the salaries of government employees and, of course, debt servicing. At this point, there's not much the senators can do for social development or investment in infrastructure, except refuse to part with their pork barrel perhaps. No wonder then they had to amuse themselves somehow.

I don't have to tell you we're lagging behind most of Southeast Asia economically. Filipinos who've been to Vietnam know that we're being out-distanced in a way that takes your breath away. Just to sober you up some more: from 2001 to 2003, we received $900 million in direct foreign investments, down from the average of $1.2 billion in 1998 to 2000. Vietnam received almost double that amount and Thailand nearly three times as much. Think of Winston supposedly buying himself a new Volvo, and it's enough to make you puke.

So it's not a mere fiscal crisis we've got on our hands. By January when textile quotas are abolished, we are going to lose a significant portion of our garment export trade to China. Of the Philippines' three million workers in manufacturing, 400,000 textile workers could be affected. Textiles account for a tenth of the Philippines' export revenue, down from a sixth in 1995 (aside from our debts and the exploding population everything else seems to be down). However, since the industry is very labor-intensive, the social and political value of clothing production is still significant. Can you imagine our unemployment figures in less than six months? Maybe we can just apply to be a vassal state to China, if we aren't already, unless our legislators have any brighter ideas.

In despair, some of us want to shift from a highly centralized government with clear separation of powers to a unicameral parliamentary form of government under a federal system. One advantage according to a cynic is that it will be cheaper with fewer people to bribe. Others think that due to our contentious politics, the government will not be stable because of frequent opposition calls for a no-confidence vote. But Lordly, Lord, what good will it do us when it will still be the usual suspects in power? That doesn't appear to leave us any options. I don't know if anyone wants to hear it, but increasingly, Filipinos appear to see their government as unable or unwilling to curb corruption and provide efficient, accountable governance. I'm not going to mention the POGO because between them and Winston I'm going to have hysterics.

Now if our present group of leaders would say that none of them would run for office after they convene a constitutional convention and come up with a new constitution, then perhaps it might just work.

You realize of course that we have a crisis in leadership as well and that even if leaders may be democratically elected (albeit in a skewed manner) they appear to lack the ability to rule effectively. Given their perceived lack of competence, professionalism, not to mention patriotism and vision (for good measure throw in the bureaucracy too in that assessment), what do we do?

Good start

INSIDE the University of the Philippines campus, I usually hang out at a place that is also frequented by street children asking for food and money. It is quite disconcerting to see them, because you never are quite certain if the right thing to do is to give or to refuse. You see them every day. Should you give your loose change freely?

I am aware that giving money to street children is discouraged even by charitable agencies. But you feel guilty telling dark, malnourished children that you do not have money to spare even if you do. The realization that you have so much while they have so little gnaws at your conscience.

Sometimes, I end up giving loose change. Most of the time, however, I just give them whatever is left of my take-out lunch. At other times, I give them my empty water bottle so that they will earn a few centavos from selling it.

There are two children I have been giving food or money more or less on a regular basis. I refer to them as the banana-cue boys.

The older of these boys is probably 12 or 13 years old, though he looks too small for his age. I first met him when he suddenly blocked my way as I stepped off the jeepney.

"Ate, bili po kayo," he pleaded. "Isa na lang po ang natitira at gusto ko na pang umuwi!"

I rarely eat food sold on the streets, especially one as polluted with exhaust emission as Katipunan. So I told him, "Hindi ako kumakain eh."

"Di ako na lang po ang kakaini!" he offered. "Pwede, Ate? Gusto ko na pang umuwi."

The sun had almost set and it had started drizzling. Who was I to keep the young boy from going home? I bought a stick from the boy so he could eat it. I was smiling as I walked away.

It made sense to me. I was not giving money to one who was undeserving. He earned it by selling his product with a lot of persistence. However, rather than simply having an exchange of goods (money and food), I got to give him food! It made me happy to know that if he had nothing else to eat that day, at least he had that banana-cue.

I have been seeing him and his younger companion quite often lately. They have become even bolder. Rather than ask me to buy from them, they sometimes now ask me to buy something for them. I am neither shocked nor affronted by their presumption. I actually enjoy buying their banana-cues for them!

I have read somewhere that there is no such thing as real altruism, which means helping or giving purely for the sake of the other without any selfish motive. I do not know if this is true, but I confess that giving what little I have makes me feel good. Is giving then a selfish act? Giving? Do I give simply to derive pleasure from doing something good?

I have not examined my motives closely, but it does not matter to me. Whatever my reasons, I am just glad that someone else benefits from my selfish actions. So what if I do it to feel good? From my own self-centered pleasure, a child who does not have much gets to eat at least.

Poverty is so pervasive in our country and many children are suffering. As a student, I am unable to do much for them, but I believe that every good deed, no matter how small, counts. For now, all I can afford is to give leftover food or buy banana-cue for the young street vendors themselves. It looks like a good place to start.

To give or not to give

Diana Mae Fulgencio

ON MY way to Divisoria one summer day, I got caught in a traffic jam. It was really irritating. Imagine all the smoke and the chatter of impatient drivers and the heat. We were just there waiting, when suddenly a young boy in tattered clothes got on the jeepney and started to wipe the passengers' shoes with a rag. When the jeepney was about to move the boy extended his left arm to us in a gesture of begging.

I was struck with his appearance. He looked pale and thin and painful. His eyes reflected the hunger that was slowly killing his young body. At his age and in his condition, he should not have been out in the streets.

When he extended a trembling hand to me, my own hand was already inside my wallet. But a woman seated beside, spoke up and said: "Don't give alms to those kids. You are spoiling their parents. The parents of those kids are probably just playing cards in their homes or drinking with their neighbors. All they know is how to reproduce."

I was torn between giving the child the P5 coin I was holding and following the woman's advice. She seemed to be sure about what she was saying. I had just come from the province. Although I read newspapers and watch television, my knowledge regarding child labor was not good enough to enable me to make a quick decision.

Now in my second year in the city, I still cannot forget the incident. I already know that what the woman said was largely correct. I know that there are parents who are so lazy they just let their children do the responsibility of providing for the family. Others have also told me that many of those kids work with syndicates and that the money we give only end up in the pockets of people who are criminally inclined.

But every time I remember how the boy looked that day and how I turned him away, I still feel guilty. I wonder what has happened to the boy. Did his parents whip him when he came home penniless? Is he still alive today? If he is, is he living a more comfortable life now?

I live in a dormitory inside an exclusive school for girls. I do not go out that much—just once every month. But almost every time I take a jeepney, a child would come up to me begging for whatever I am willing to give. And still I am not sure whether I should give him some money or just turn him away.

Such encounters are, of course, quite ordinary. But while the more fortunate among us are busy with their cell phones, or buying "kikay" stuff, perhaps we should take time to think about the children who are trying to make a living in the streets. Their number seems to be growing. What can we do to help them?

Look around and see these kids going around and knocking at the windows of cars stuck in traffic. Is there hope for their future?

A clear indication of a serious moral crisis

POPE John Paul II said that terrorism is and always will be a show of ferocity and that—precisely for this reason—it will never be able to solve conflicts among human beings. Only reason and love are the valid means of surpassing and resolving disputes between people. No situation of injustice, no feeling of frustration, no philosophy or religion can justify such an aberration.

The explosion of violent incidents we are witnessing around the world is the result of scandalous injustices and imbalances that create the climate for unbridled revenge. When fundamental rights are violated, it is easy to fall prey to temptations of hatred and violence. Nonetheless, we must keep in check our base impulses and together work to build a global culture of solidarity that restores hope in the future in all peoples, especially the young.

I am thinking not only of economic systems but also of the laws which, under the guise of justice, violate the fundamental rights of individuals (e.g., the unborn and the aged through abortion, genetic manipulation and euthanasia). Such laws do not lead to freedom; they are rather catalysts for aggression. They assault our moral sensibilities, leading us subtly unaware into corruption.

To claim, for example, the right to abortion, or to recognize that right in law, means to give human freedom a perverse and evil significance: an absolute power over others and against others.

Many expressed shock over the recent massacre of innocent children in Russia, but few seem concerned that millions more of children—the most innocent of innocents—are being lawfully killed each day through abortion in hospitals and clinics around the globe—and in the most gruesome manner.

This is because, today, in many people's consciences, the evilness of abortion has become progressively obscured.

The acceptance of abortion in the popular mind, in behavior and in law itself is a telling sign of an extremely dangerous crisis of the moral sense, which is becoming more and more incapable of distinguishing between good and evil, even when the fundamental right to life is at stake.

Given such a grave situation, we need, now more than ever, to have the courage to look the truth in the eye and to call things by their proper names, without yielding to convenient compromises or to the temptation of self-deception.

Terrorism is not only found in places like New York, Spain, Iraq, Israel and Russia but in our own home towns and in families. This, ultimately, is where terrorism begins and where it must be curtailed.

OPINION

What will it take to solve the fiscal crisis?

I AM a simple housewife and, just like every Filipino, I am very much concerned about the present state of our nation.

Need we experience a catastrophe before we learn to live and work together in the spirit of cooperation?

A week before the idea of a Bayanihan Fund was raised, I asked my husband if it were possible to solve our financial crisis through a fund drive of some sort. The thought came to my mind noting people's willingness to share something with the hapless in times of calamities. He gave a negative answer, saying our debts are just far too high. He even opined that what we need is a war so as to bring down the continuously growing population and, perhaps, eventually bring about change of some kind.

Donations are now pouring in from all sectors yet there are doubts and mistrust among the citizenry as to how these donations will be put to use. So, may I call the attention of government people. It seems your morality quotient is very low and you need some kind of inner overhauling.

Crisis comes because somehow, somewhere, someone committed a blunder, a mistake. As for our country, these mistakes come in the form of graft and corruption, misuse, abuse and misuse of resources, incompetent people and abuse of power. In every government, these seem ever present. Power and money do open a person to too much temptation. I'm not saying our government is completely corrupt. There are still a few good men in there.

We are, indeed, in a time of crisis and we have to deal with it. Face it and think of possible solutions and implement them when feasible. But why is it that instead of cooperating with each other, we keep on pointing an accusing finger at each other? That solves nothing and only cause further animosity and hurt egos, triggering more charges and countercharges.

I came across these lines somewhere and, perhaps, we should bear these in mind. "If things have gone awry, let neither of us put an accusing finger. Who is to blame is not important, only how shall we set the situation right?"

So, once again, let me ask the question, Need we experience a catastrophe before we learn to live and work together in the spirit of cooperation?

How to bail out GMA from the fiscal crisis

TAKE NOTE of how President Macapagal-Arroyo smiles these days. I wonder how a national leader can flash such smile in the face of the shameless begging for financial help to save our country's economy.

With the present state of the nation, the President should look composed but not proud and happy. For she has nothing to be proud and happy about her administration's loans which are much bigger than the combined borrowings during the Ramos and Estrada regimes.

One can't help thinking now that she borrowed a lot of money to make it appear that her transition government was doing well. In order to get ahead in the pre-election ratings game, if not to provide rich nourishment for the cash cows in her campaign for the presidency. If her massive borrowings are connected to the crisis we are in, she aggravates the offense and makes it doubly hurtful by holding our entire nation hostage under threat of economic death if we don't agree to bail her out of her own crime by paying new taxes.

The nation is caught between the devil and the deep blue sea. With the unresolved questions on her alleged cheating to win the 2004 elections, the exposes on the fat salaries of GOCC officials and her controversial appointments, I am appalled that this administration has the gall to offer us a dreadful, bitter pill to bring us out of the fiscal crisis.

Age does matter

HERE in our country, people who reach the age of 35 and above are not given equal job opportunities. You'll notice this when you look at the classified ads section of the newspapers. Employees are very particular about age limit.

This is the reason why cheap labor is flourishing in our country and why many degree holders are unemployed. Also, this is one of the main reasons why our skilled laborers are forced to find job abroad.

Those in the 35-and-above age group are the ones most affected by the economic crisis: they have children they must feed and send to school, never mind the high cost of education. In other countries, every person has an equal chance of getting a job. Lawmakers should pass a law to protect a person from being discriminated because of age.

We must not underestimate people just because of their age. For as long as they are capable, they must be given a chance to prove their worth.

Cleaning the movie houses

THIS is in reaction to the audacious move of SM nor to show sex films in its chain of theaters.

As parents, we are deeply grateful for being spared the embarrassment of having to shield our children from watching the preview of sex films when we bring them to see children's movies.

We need to keep our sense of worth which oftentimes is eroded by sex movies. People do say that after watching these "dirty" movies, they do feel "dirty" too. And if you compare, movie houses showing sex films are indeed dirtier than those showing quality movies. It's time, perhaps, to ask the cleaners?

Paging the Ayaas and Gokongwe! Let us try even just for one year ban sex films and violent films from our theaters.

Filipinos are impressionable. Armida Siguion-Reyna and others can pontificate till hell freezes over, but the reality is that Filipinos are great imitators. They want to be led to follow good examples, and they want to become the persons they often see in the movies, television, etc.

Non-transparent, corrupt, dishonest

THE ROW between Roberto Romulo and Max Soliven is just the tip of the iceberg. I think it is a reflection of problems in Philippine media and politics.

The debate is not whether citizens have the right to reply to attacks or not. For the politicians and big businesses, the main concern is how to shield themselves from criticisms and attacks from fellow politicians as they all viciously fight to rob the national coffers.

I think the Philippine press is not independent because

- It is being used as a publicity and lobby tool for politicians and big business.
- It is owned by vested interests.
- It mirrors the subculture of Philippine politics which is non-transparent, corrupt and dishonest.

10 solons hold low key talks with MILF rebs

COTABATO CITY—At least 10 congressmen held a low-profile meeting with leaders of the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) in an undisclosed town in Maguindanao on Thursday where they discussed several issues in connection with the Moro rebellion.

Maguindanao Rep. Simeon Datumanong, who led the House team constituted by Speaker Jose de Venecia, on Friday described the meeting with MILF Chair Murad Ebrahim and other rebel leaders as "intimate and cordial."

"We were there not as negotiators but facilitators to help foster better understanding with the MILF leadership on the issues surrounding the peace process," Datumanong said.

Most of the legislators who attended the meeting could be considered veterans of the peace process with Moro rebels with some of them playing key roles in the signing of the 1996 peace agreement with the Moro National Liberation Front (MILF).

The MILF is a breakaway faction of the MNLF and was not involved in later negotiations that led to the signing of the 1996 peace treaty.

"We have done this before with the MNLF and we want this success duplicated by the government in its peace deal with the MILF," Datumanong said.

Desire

Datumanong said that during the meeting, the MILF leaders told them that the rebel group also wanted an end to the long-running Moro rebellion.

"Just like the government, the MILF wants the Mindanao conflict resolved sooner," Datumanong quoted Ebrahim as saying.

The government and the MILF have been talking for the past five years in a bid to end the rebellion.

The formal peace talks have been suspended for quite some time now but low-key negotiations have been continuing, with Malaysia acting as third-country mediator.

The progress of the peace talks was hampered by several issues, including allegations the MILF has ties with the regional terror group Jemaah Islamiyah.

The MILF repeatedly denied the allegations and even invited the government and even foreign governments to come and visit its camps.

However, a police intelligence officer told the Inquirer in Kidapawan City that during an MILF assembly in Maguindanao on Aug. 27, Ebrahim had ordered field commanders to "confine JI members in a secluded island in Lanao del Sur."

Hidden asset

The police intelligence officer, who requested anonymity, said this was an obvious move to prevent other parties from seeing the JI operatives, most of them Indonesians, if a visit to an MILF camp had been agreed upon.

"Thus just confirmed reports that they have links with the terrorists," he said.

MILF spokesperson Eid Kabalu said the claim was an exaggeration of what actually took place during the assembly.

"Oh my God... that is not true. What the chairman told us was to always keep the guard (sic) against the JI and not to confine them or protect them or anything like that," Kabalu said.

He said the MILF has welcomed the fresh claim because "we can have ample time to discuss this with the government."

The peace negotiation was expected to resume after Oct. 10 when the Malaysian-led ceasefire monitoring team had already been deployed.

Peace advocates in Mindanao said they were already impatient with the long delay and urged both the government and the rebel group to speed up the resumption of the negotiations.

Mary Ann Arnado of the Mindanao Peoples Caucus said they are anxious and impatient because of fear that with the resurging issues against the MILF, the formal negotiations would again be jeopardized.

"As Mindanawans and peace advocates, we strongly urge the Philippine government, the MILF, and the government of Malaysia to resume the peace talks as soon as possible," Arnado said. Charlie Serense and Jeffrey Tupat, PDI Mindanao Bureau

GMA cancels northern Cebu trip as weather turns bad during visit

By John R. Bulambog
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—President Macapagal-Arroyo was forced yesterday to cancel her trip to the northern part of Cebu due to heavy torrential rains brought by the inter-tropical convergence zone.

The President was scheduled to inaugurate the Bogo Central Terminal yesterday together with Transportation Secretary Leandro Mendoza. After which, she was to motor to Hagnaya, in the neighboring San Remigio town for another inauguration there.

About 200 residents of Bogo town, 107 km from Cebu City, were dismayed when Mayor Celestino Martinez III announced the bad news.

Saul Paa, senior official of the Media Accreditation and Relations Office (Maro), yesterday said the President was on board the presidential helicopter from the southern resort town of Moalboal bound for Bogo when the pilot decided to not to proceed due to heavy rains and zero visibility and instead landed on Mactan Island.

Arroyo was staying at the Serena Beach Resort in Moalboal, some 83 km south of Cebu City, during her three-day visit in Cebu.

Paa said President Arroyo was on board a VELLE 412 chopper that departed from Moalboal at 10:45 a.m. yesterday. She was scheduled to arrive at 11:45 a.m. in Bogo.

Maro officials said the President's helicopter headed to the Mactan-Benito Ebuen Airbase where she boarded her presidential plane that brought her and her party to Davao City, where she was scheduled to speak at the convention of the Mindanao Export Development Council and to later attend a wedding.

Martinez said he was disappointed that the President was not able to come, especially since town officials and residents had prepared for the event.

Customs men foil attempt to smuggle P2M in machines

By Allan Macatuno
PDI Central Luzon Desk

SUBIC BAY FREEPORT ZONE—Bureau of Customs personnel here scored in its war against smugglers on Wednesday after they stopped an attempt to ship out of this freeport zone 48 packages of used machines and parts worth more than P2 million.

Reports said BoC agents, armed with a warrant of seizure and detention issued by Subic District collector Arnel Alcaraz, stopped six container vans and trucks at the freeport's Tipo Gate containing the undeclared packages.

Alcaraz said the real value of the items, mostly machines used in the production of electronic parts and components, were not declared in the shipping manifest.

He said BoC operatives seized the goods for alleged undervaluation and misdeclaration of entry.

The 48 packages were loaded into the truck and container vans whose cargo was declared at a gross weight of 2,887 kilograms.

"The seizure of the articles was prompted by the fact that the declared gross weight of the articles, which was 2,887 kg, would be hardly enough to (fit into) the trucks and containers vans used in transporting the (items)," Alcaraz said.

The machines arrived at the port of Subic in 1999 and were consigned to Wistron Infocom, a Subic-based company. It had a declared value of more than P2 million.

On Sept. 23 this year, Wistron sold these for P150,000 to R & C Denshi International, a firm based in Sta Rosa, Laguna, through a negotiated sale. The shipment was assessed P20,140 in duties and taxes.

Alcaraz said BoC officials would file charges of violation of Section 2503 of the Tariff and Customs Code of the Philippines against R & C Denshi International, the shipment's claimant.

Fishing boat mutineers charged; 10 of 12 nabbed

By Aquiles Zonia
PDI Mindanao Bureau

GENERAL SANTOS CITY—Twelve of the more than 200 fishing workers here, who staged a mutiny against their employer by seizing company-owned fishing boats in Papua New Guinea last month, were charged in a local

The filing of the charges was only discovered when police authorities enforced arrest warrants issued by the court.

Earlier, the RD Tuna Ventures

Inc., the fishermen's employer, was reported as pledging in a dialogue brokered by the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA) that the mutineers would not be sued anymore.

On Wednesday, police here enforced a warrant against the 12 fishermen but only managed to arrest 10 of them.

Roger Villarosa, 43, a boat captain and one of the arrested mutineers, denied the charges.

He said they were made to believe that the issue had been settled already.

During the mutiny, Villarosa and his companions demanded that they be paid according to standards set by the International Labor Organization (ILO) and that they should be treated humanely.

They refused to release several company-owned vessels until their demands had been met.

At the height of the mutiny, the management of RD Ventures said it would sue the workers because the company was allegedly losing about $100,000 per day because of the protest.

Cops nab couple in pyramid racket

CAMP SIMEON OLA, Legazpi City—A couple allegedly involved in an investment scam was arrested by police yielding an unlicensed firearm and ammunition Wednesday in their car.

In a report to this camp, Chief Insp. Nino Berdin of the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group in Camarines Norte identified the suspects as Melchor Fuentes Baarde and his wife, lawyer Brenda Victorino Baarde.

According to Berdin, Melchor told police he was the associate publisher of tabloid Text Tonite and the executive vice president for administration of the Mateo Management Group (MMG) based in Muntinlupa City. Brenda initially introduced herself as Lea Gregorio and confessed to be a former officer of MMG.

The couple was first sighted at Vinzons, Camarines Norte and later intercepted in Barangay Poblacion, Sta. Elena of the same province where they were caught in possession of an unlicensed .45 cal. pistol and live ammunition.

CIDG records said the Baarde couple was subject of a warrant of arrest for estafa issued by Judge Bonifacio Sanz Maceda of RTC Branch 275, with no bail recommended. Romie Lorejo, Southern Luzon Bureau

Balangiga rings bells in austere times

By Rolando O. Borrinaga
Balangiga, Eastern Samar

THE PRINT on the back of the locally printed t-shirts said it all: "Let the bells ring [from] the belfry where they belong."

With that terse message, the town of Balangiga in Eastern Samar commemorated the 103rd anniversary of the "Balangiga Encounter Day" last Tuesday, Sept. 28.

In line with the government's austerity measures during this fiscal crisis, the town also cut on some expenses. The ceremonial activities were all cramped up in the morning, including the theatrical reenactment of their famous event, which used to be held in the afternoon.

And the town parade after the morning church Mass no longer had the customary floats, including the one with the copy of the memorial with the two bells of Balangiga now displayed at an Air Force base in the United States.

And the town now talks about three identified bells, not just two, which they wish to be returned to the church belfry of their town.

The historical event

The officially called "Balangiga Encounter" refers to the local event in the morning of Saturday, Sept. 28, 1901, when some 500 native fighters mostly armed with bolos staged a successful attack on soldiers of Company C, 9th US Infantry Regiment, who were mostly eating or lining up for breakfast in their garrison in the town.

The result was the "worst single defeat" of the US Army during the Philippine-American War more than a century ago. This event was known in US official reports and publications as the "Balangiga Massacre."

Of the 74 men of Company C, 36 were killed during the attack (including the three commissioned officers), eight of the wounded died later during the escape by bancas to Basey town, and four were missing and presumed dead.

Of the 26 American survivors, only four were not wounded.

The natives suffered 28 deaths and 22 wounded.

For a long time, it had been believed that the church bells of Balangiga were used to signal the attack on the US troops. But two recently published books about the Balangiga event had established that that attack had begun when a bell was rung as signal for the hidden reinforcements to join the attack on the garrison.

Considered one of the worst defeats in US military history, the Filipino victory in Balangiga was followed by a shameful episode that the US government has not yet regretted nor apologized for.

US military authorities retaliated with a "kill and burn" policy to take back Samar, deliberately equating a victorious small town with an entire island, from October 1901 to January 1902.

Implemented by the Sixth Separate Brigade under Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith of the US Army, which included a battalion of US Marines under Major Littleton T. W. Waller, the campaign was blamed for the alleged disappearance of some 15,000 people in Samar.

The general reportedly gave orders to kill anybody capable of bearing arms (specifically, 10 years old and above) during the combat operations to reduce Samar into a "howling wilderness."

Aside from the population loss, the Samar campaign resulted in massive devastation of the rural economic base in terms of hundreds of burned houses, destroyed native boats, and slaughtered carabaos, the Filipinos' draft animals. US troops likewise burned and confiscated rice and food stocks and market-ready abaca (hemp) fibers, the principal source of local cash income.

General Smith was eventually made the scapegoat for the shameful policy on Samar. He was forced to retire from the US Army following a court martial.

The three church bells of Balangiga were taken days after the attack by men of the 11th US Infantry, another US Army unit that occupied the abandoned town before being relieved by US Marines on Oct. 23, 1901.

'War trophies'

These "war trophies" were shipped out of the Leyte-Samar region from the headquarters of the 11th US Infantry at the former Camp Bumpus, now the Leyte Park Resort in Tacloban City.

The camp was named after 1st Lt. Edward A. Bumpus, Harvard alumnus and second in command of Company C, who was also killed in Balangiga.

The smallest bell was turned over to the headquarters of the 9th US Infantry Regiment in Calbayog, Samar, around April 1902. This relic is on permanent display at the traveling museum of the 9th US Infantry, now stationed in Tongduchon, South Korea.

The two bigger bells were brought to the US by returning 11th Infantry soldiers to their home station at the former Fort D.A. Russell, now the EE. Warren Air Force Base, in Cheyenne, Wyoming. Both are now displayed at the Balangiga Memorial in its Trophy Park.

The return of the Bells of Balangiga to the Philippines remains the last issue of contention between the US and Philippine governments related to the Philippine-American War.

Prospects

In an interview with the INQUIRER, Balangiga Mayor Catalina M. Camenforre hoped that the US government would take the initiative to have the bells in Wyoming returned to her town in the spirit of peace and reconciliation.

In a speech prepared for the occasion, Eastern Samar Gov. Ben R. Evardone cited recent findings of the Balangiga Research Group (BRG) related to the bells issue.

The BRG is a multi-national group composed of this writer, Bob Couttie, a Subic-based video director and historian, and Jean Wall, the daughter of the first American soldier to be attacked in Balangiga a century ago.

The BRG findings presented independent proofs of the Balangiga origin of the three bells.

Experts around the world that the BRG had consulted were one in saying that based on custom law, military law, and international treaties, the contested bells belong to Balangiga.

All US officials directly involved in the Balangiga issue on both sides of the Pacific, including US Army senior leaders and diplomats, have also been one in saying, although quietly, that their government knows that the right, legal and ethical course of action is to return the bells to their rightful place—that is, in Balangiga.

On top of these, the US Congress, through the Unified Code of Military Justice, has provided the US president with the required authority to return the bells regardless of the status of the property rights involved.

"Now that the US government has run out of arguments to skirt the issue of the Balangiga bells, perhaps it is high time for President George Bush to muster his political will to return these bells where they belong, and bring a closure to the last issue of contention between the Philippines and United States related to the Philippine-American War a century ago," Evardone said.

Young cancer patient thanks God, Inquirer readers

By Jolene R. Bulambot
Cebu City

THREE days before his Sept. 15 scheduled operation, June Arceo celebrated his 12th birthday and had only one wish in mind—to survive. He got what he wished for.

Indeed, it was a wish come true for June, a young cancer victim, who just survived the most crucial surgery that would eventually save his life.

Fresh from eight hours of delicate surgery to remove the tumor in his right pelvic area, June could only utter the words "Thank You Lord" when he regained consciousness.

He was also elated when he realized that his leg was not amputated, contrary to what his doctors earlier told him.

"I looked for my parents when I woke up. I was very happy to see them at the recovery room with me. I also smiled when I discovered that my leg was not cut. I really felt scared when they sent me to the operating room. I was trembling in fear and a nun was with me praying before I was finally sedated. I really prayed hard," June said.

Dr. Judith Acol, June's orthopedist, told the INQUIRER Visayas that the tumor grew bigger and covered the entire right pelvis of the patient.

The mass measured 8x9.5x10 centimeters, prompting the doctors to consider amputating the right limb to allow the removal of the tumor.

It was a 'miracle'

However, the doctors later agreed to conduct the "limb salvage surgery" to save the right leg, while successfully removing the tumor.

"Our first priority was to remove the tumor and go on with the chemotherapy. Second, we decided to save the leg even if some nerves connected to it would be affected. We have to sacrifice some parts of the nerves," Acol said.

June would be subjected to intense physical therapy sessions aimed at making him functional, she added.

"Amazingly, the surgery was easier because the chemotherapy really helped. Everything else aside from the leg was okay. June would be trained to move, stand and later walk with a walker and clutches," Acol said.

June, when visited by the INQUIRER three days after the surgery, was recovering fast. After less than two weeks of confinement, he was finally discharged.

June said he was lucky. He thanked those who helped him during his difficult moments.

Aside from his loving parents, Joseph and Vilma, the Arceos were not alone. Relatives, friends, colleagues in the workplace and even neta, strangers offered hope and support to the family.

June said what happened to him was a "miracle."

"I felt I was never alone. I am very happy that people, some of them strangers, supported me. The Lord is so good. I am very grateful," June told the INQUIRER in his hospital bed.

June, who was diagnosed to have been inflicted with soft tissue sarcoma cancer that was already on its fourth stage, was featured in the INQUIRER Visayas on its August 18 issue appealing for help.

When the story was published, June had been responding well and completing the 12 cycles of chemotherapy and was already ready for the surgery to remove the cancer mass that was spread in his abdomen.

JUNE Arceo grins when he finds that his leg was not amputated, thanks to timely surgery that was mainly paid for by Inquirer readers who responded to his plea for help.

domen. The only problem then was that his parents did not have the P200,000 needed for the medical procedure.

Overwhelming help

Joseph, a technician who only earns P6,000 a month, was overwhelmed with gratitude to those who were touched by his son's strong will to live and responded to his son's story.

He told the INQUIRER that the surgery could not have been made possible if not for the donations that poured in from INQUIRER readers.

The elder Arceo said six individuals from Luzon who read the INQUIRER story called him and donated money. They were able to raise more than P60,000 from them. "We are so grateful to the donors. The donation we received did help us since the surgery, medicines and the laboratory expenses cost at least P200,000. The donors were also supportive and we thank them for their comfort and prayers," Joseph said.

The father also said four Filipinos, three working and one studying, abroad also extended financial help upon reading his son's story on Inq7, the INQUIRER's website.

"I never expected this. I was surprised when I got calls and text messages from people saying they're Filipinos working in Saudi, Cyprus and Japan who wanted to help us. We are really very grateful," the teary-eyed father said.

High hopes

Dr. Linda Lipatan, June's pediatric chemotherapy hematologist, said the boy would still have to undergo additional chemotherapy sessions because his cancer cells have spread over his bone marrow area.

The doctor said she was still documenting the result of the bone marrow test, which she conducted before the surgery to determine whether the cancer cells have spread over to the other organs such as the lungs and chest.

But she explained that June's chance of survival was high since he responded well to the first 12 cycles of chemotherapy.

"I have high hopes for June. In two to three weeks from now he would be undergoing another chemotherapy but this time, it's going to be more intense. There could have been lesser risk if the cancer was localized but in his case I haven't finished documenting it," Lipatan said.

Joseph also thanked his colleagues who donated blood and his employer, the Norisk Trading Corp., for standing as a guarantor to the hospital through a letter of authorization.

Lipatan said June's chemotherapy might run for a year, which means additional financial burden for the Arceos.

But Joseph, inspired by the strong will and determination of his son to live, would not stop from finding ways to help the patient.

mentioned alongside Iraq and Afghanistan, Malacañang officials preferred to take this on a positive light.

"It was a pretty straightforward statement on the ongoing fight against terrorism within our shores," Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye said.

"We did get help from the US in terms of training. Their civic-action projects in the first Balikatan did a lot to rehabilitate Basilan which was the former hotbed of the Abu Sayyaf," he added.

Still on the map

"It's good," Presidential Chief of Staff Norberto Gonzales said when Bush mentioned the Philippines. "The reality is we are on the map of global terrorism and we don't have to hide that."

"It's true that we're doing something against terrorism although we are more Ji (Jemaah Islamiyah than al-Qaida)," he said.

Gonzales was former national security adviser who was part of the negotiations for the release of a Filipino truck driver abducted by Iraqi militants last July. He said the Philippines' proximity to Indonesia and the existence of armed groups such as the Moro Islamic Liberation Front in Mindanao made the Philippines a "prime destination of terrorists."

"What I heard recently was that Bush was no longer mentioning the Philippines among the allies but for him to mention us in the debate means we are still in his consciousness," Gonzales said.

Bunye, who watched the US presidential debate, initially begged off from making any comments about Bush, saying it was an "internal matter" for the US.

The debate, held at the University of Miami in Florida, was the first in a series to help undecided American voters choose their next President in the November elections.

"The debate was a good exchange," Bunye said. "Both candidates did well."

Bunye said he paid closer attention to the reactions than the actual debate and noted that some comments included the observation that "Bush is a strong leader" and that Kerry "has not shown that he is a really good alternative."

Meanwhile, President Macapagal-Arroyo could not be coaxed into revealing which leader she was rooting for.

Two administration senators, however, did not take too kindly to Bush's claim that Manila was part of the international terrorist network, saying this claim was not only false, it's something the country did not need right now.

Not right

Sen. Manuel Villar Jr. said it was not right for Bush to mention the Philippines in relation to his problem with Iraq.

"He's got a lot of problems in his candidacy right now," Villar said, adding that the US President should not have included the Philippines in his bid for re-election.

He noted that Bush was trying to link the image of the Philippines in the international community.

"I don't think this is any way to treat a longtime US ally such as the Philippines," Villar said.

Sen. Ralph Recto also reacted.

"The world's most powerful man just told a worldwide audience of half-a-billion that the Philippines is a major battleground in the war against terror."

But Kerry managed to deliver his most cogent attack yet on the Iraq war and convey a sense of solidity and coherence in front of the man who has spent months ridiculing him as a weak-kneed waffler.

Very effective

"I think he was very effective at downplaying the argument that he had flipped and flopped on different issues," said David Corbin, a political science professor at the University of New Hampshire.

It was not clear whether Kerry's showing would translate directly into the new support he badly needs to overcome Bush's lead in the polls, generally estimated at five to eight points.

But several analysts said he now had a chance of recharging the somewhat dispirited Democratic ranks and winning back anti-Bush voters who had deserted him amid doubts about his leadership.

The debate was make-or-break for Kerry, whose campaign had been reeling from relentless Republican assaults on his credibility, toughness and vaunted combat record in the Vietnam war.

Kerry charged that Bush committed "a colossal error" by invading Iraq, as tens of millions of Americans watched the televised confrontation.

'Mixed messages'

Bush countered that Kerry was undermining US credibility in the war on terrorism with "mixed messages" about whether toppling Saddam Hussein was worth the cost.

"What message does that send our troops? What message does that send to our allies? What message does that send the Iraqis?" the Republican incumbent asked.

Iraq and national security dominated as the two candidates battled over how to stabilize that war-torn country, where more than 1,000 US soldiers have died and deadly chaos that shows no sign of ebbing.

Kerry threw the first punch in the political prizefight by confidently declaring "I can do a better job" on Iraq and on averting another terrorist attack like the Sept. 11, 2001 strikes.

He also charged Bush unnecessarily divert ed resources from the hunt for Osama bin Laden to the war in Iraq, saying: "This president has made, I regret to say, a colossal error of judgment. And judgment is what we look for in the president."

"The world is better off without Saddam Hussein," said the president, who painted his rival as fickle on crucial national security issues, noting he voted to authorize the Iraq war in 2002 but was against war funding in 2003.

"We're not going to achieve our objective if we send mixed signals to our troops, our friends, the Iraqi citizens," said Bush. "You cannot lead if you send mixed messages."

"I've had one position, one consistent position, that Saddam Hussein was a threat. There was a right way to disarm him and a wrong way. And the president chose the wrong way," countered the Massachusetts senator.

Worldwide popularity

Kerry has accused Bush of fracturing alliances and damaging US global standing in the rush to war; Bush has charged Kerry is more worried about worldwide popularity than protecting the United States.

Both sides predictably claimed victory.

The Republicans said Bush effectively highlighted the mixed signals the Democrat was sending on Iraq. They said the president made a compelling case for more time to finish the war on terror he started after the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks.

Democrats hailed their candidate for hammering away at the war in Iraq as a diversion from the real battle against al-Qaida terrorists and building his credentials as a smarter, more effective commander.

Kerry also tried to cover confusion over his various votes in the Senate on Iraq by acknowledging that he might have flubbed some of his rhetoric, but Bush's muddled invasion was much worse.

Losing steam

While Bush started strong in holding himself out as the best hope for keeping the United States safe, some analysts said, he appeared to lose steam and showed some irritation towards the middle of the debate before closing with a flourish.

Debate show: No surprises despite hype

NEW YORK—A TV review of Thursday's presidential debate could have mostly been written before airtime. And it was, by many critics.

There were no surprises in this 90-minute quiz show costarring President George W. Bush and his Democratic challenger, Sen. John Kerry.

For days, the importance of the debate had been drummed by the media in lively terms.

"This is combat, and somebody will lose," said Ron Reagan Jr. on MSNBC just moments before the debate began.

Bush and Kerry would soon be "duking it out," said Fox News Channel's Shepard Smith, soft-peddling the fact that neither candidate could invade the other's space three meters away, or even ask the other a direct question.

All that and more was covered in the "Memorandum of Understanding," a 32-page tip sheet to what would transpire. Negotiated in self-defense by representatives of both candidates, this contract also covered podium height, 30-second countdown lights, the format of the questioning and many other details in an effort to leave nothing needlessly to chance—and to prevent a damaging mistake.

The most radical departure from the contract's terms were the networks' frequent split-screen shots, showing one candidate's response to the other's remarks.

While Kerry spoke, Bush more than once was glimpsed blinking and looking annoyed.

While Bush spoke, Kerry often appeared to scribble notes.

"John Kerry was clearly aware that the camera might always be on him," said CNN's Jeff Greenfield, who added that, to a viewer confronting the two images, "it does seem to me that John Kerry looked—and I hate this phrase—as presidential as the president."

Who won? It was a question networks couldn't help making guesses about.

Instant polls by ABC and CBS gave the night to Kerry.

native to drugs like aspirin that can cause ulcers and gastrointestinal bleeding. It has been marketed in more than 80 countries.

The decision to remove the drug from the market is the largest drug recall in history as measured by sales.

Merck stock plunged 27 percent Thursday on the news, reducing the company's stock market value by $25 billion and helping pull the Dow Jones industrial average down by 0.6 percent for the day.

Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit said he had not heard from the local distributor of the drug concerning the Vioxx pullout.

Dayrit said that the Philippine General Hospital had admitted cases of Filipino patients suffering from side-effects after an intake of Vioxx.

"If there has been a worldwide pullout then the order from the Bureau of Food and Drugs should be out soon as well," Dayrit told the Inquirer.

Results of study

Merck decided to pull the drug from pharmacy shelves after a study that it hoped would show Vioxx prevented colon polyps, which can sometimes become cancerous. Instead, the study showed that the drug led to heart attacks and strokes. After getting the results late last week, Merck quickly ended the trial.

The study was small—15 cases of heart attacks, strokes or blood clots per thousand people over three years compared with 7.5 such events per thousand patients taking a placebo. But the data were so unambiguous that Merck told federal regulators this week that it had halted the trial and would take the drug off the market; it announced that decision Thursday.

"What we found in this study is that beginning after 18 months, there was a discernible and unexpected increase in cardiovascular disease rates," Dr. Peter S. Kim, president of Merck Research Labs, said.

The right thing

"We think Merck did the right thing," said Dr. Steven F. Galis, the acting director of the FDA's Center for Drug Evaluation and Research.

The possibility that Vioxx might increase the risk of heart attacks first emerged three years ago, in a Merck study of 7,000 patients with rheumatoid arthritis. Vioxx and the two Pfizer arthritis drugs are designed to block inflammation and pain as effectively as standard nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs such as aspirin and ibuprofen, while causing far fewer ulcers and gastrointestinal problems than the older treatments.

Pfizer statement

Pfizer Inc., which markets Celebrex, a competitor of Vioxx, affirmed the safety of Celebrex.

In a statement, Pfizer said over 27 million patients in the United States had been prescribed with Celebrex (celecoxib) and that in the Philippines, there had been over four million prescriptions since its launch. Celebrex was approved by the Philippine Bureau of Food and Drugs in 1999.

"Pfizer is confident in the long-term cardiovascular safety of Celebrex," said Dr. Joe Peczek, Pfizer president of worldwide development.

US regulators said drugs in the same category as the withdrawn Vioxx would get close scrutiny to see if they also could cause heart attacks.

"We are going to be more interested in looking at long-term data on new products that come down the pike," Dr. Steven Galis, acting director of the Food and Drug Administration's Center for Drug Evaluation and Research, told reporters.

More lawsuits?

An Oklahoma lawsuit filed on Thursday charging that Merck & Co. misled patients about the safety of its arthritis drug may signal many more such suits against the drugmaker following its withdrawal of Vioxx, legal experts said.

The suit, filed on behalf of an Oklahoma County resident but likely to become a class-action effort, alleges Vioxx raises the risk of heart attack, blood clots and other serious cardiovascular events, which can lead to injuries and death.

"In America we sue," said Anthony Sabino, associate professor of law at St. John's University in New York. "This is very much a visceral reaction by the market, but I have to say it is an overreaction."

No cover-up

"Merck took proactive action. There was not an ounce of cover-up," he said.

The Vioxx withdrawal mirrors similar health-related actions such as Bayer AG's 2001 decision to pull cholesterol drug Baycol off the market after it was linked to severe muscle weakness and Wyeil's 1997 recall of diet drug fen-phen, which was tied to heart valve damage and a deadly wing coagulation. New York Times, Agence France-Presse, Reuters, AP and Bianca Brown.

7 suspected robbers dead in shootout

By Leila B. Salaverria

SEVEN suspected members of a robbery group were killed after they shot it out with operatives of the National Bureau of Investigation and the Philippine National Police along the South Luzon Expressway in Laguna yesterday afternoon.

The suspects, said to be members of the Digoy robbery group, were reportedly on their way to Manila after they had allegedly robbed businessman Eddie Lim in Barangay Loo, Calamba, Laguna earlier, said NBI-National Capital Region director Edmund Arugay.

Arugay headed the NBI team that participated in the operation.

NBI Director Reynaldo Wycoco, who had also rushed to the scene, said in a radio interview later that three or four suspects had escaped. None of the identities of the seven fatalities were immediately available.

According to Arugay, a joint team of police and NBI agents were tracking down the suspects' yellow Ford Fiera (PPL-407) when they sensed the lawmen's presence.

Shots then rang out from the suspects' vehicle, prompting the operatives to retaliate, Arugay added. After an exchange of gunfire for several minutes near the Southwoods exit on the Manila-bound lane of the SLEX, seven suspects lay dead. None of the policemen or NBI agents were hurt.

Recovered from the Fiera were an undetermined amount of cash, a shotgun and several short firearms, and police uniforms believed to have been used by the suspects.

Arugay explained that the NBI had learned earlier that the Digoy group would strike Friday, but they did not know where.

Later in the afternoon, the NBI received a tip that the group had just struck in Barangay Loo in Calamba at around 2 p.m.

Upon receiving the information, the NBI called up the National Capital Region Police Office to request backup, then waited for the suspects at the Southwoods exit.

Arugay said members of the Digoy group wear uniforms whenever they rob establishments to initially ward off suspicions about their activities.

He said that when the group conducted the Calamba robbery earlier, the suspects were also in police uniform.

The NBI official added that the group usually robbed gasoline stations and private establishments. With Christian V. Esguerra and Marlon Ramos, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

AUV Express coming up, but jeeps and buses need not worry

By Clarissa S. Batino

THE AUV Express is coming to town.

Air-conditioned 10-seaters, more popularly known as the "FX," will soon have regular terminals where passengers can get a ride. The transportation department is preparing an order that would define the franchise of the loosely-regulated FX or public Asian Utility Vehicles, according to transport officials.

The catch is, the vehicles can't pick up or drop off their riders except at the terminals. An AUV Express must fill up the seats from the terminal and drop all passengers to the end point or the other terminal so they do not compete with the jeepneys and buses.

The Land Transportation Franchising and Regulatory Board said it was just waiting for a department order before releasing a set of parameters that would "legalize" the operations of the AUV Express.

The yellow-plate AUVs, according to LITFRB chair Maria Elena Bautista, were currently operating "outside the provisions of their franchise." She said these are different from the "mega taxis" or yellow-plate AUVs with meters, which should operate like a cab.

"In the meantime, we are not apprehending the AUVs while the department order has not been released," said the LITFRB chief.

Bautista said that once the department order is out, her agency would allow 9,044 franchises currently in limbo to be converted into franchises for the AUV Express.

She said they hope to implement the order before Christmas so the system would be in place before the holiday traffic worsens.

The LITFRB had identified 190 routes and 380 terminals for the AUV Express, with each route not to exceed 35 kilometers.

"The idea is for the AUVs not to compete with jeeps and buses, so it's an end-to-end route," said Bautista. "And it should not be more than 35 kilometers because AUVs are not designed as mass transit," she added.

Bautista said the LITFRB was likely to adopt the fare scheme of vehicles-for-hire, that is, P6 for the first 5 km and P1 for every succeeding km. For-hire vehicles are seeking a fare hike to P10 for the first 5 km and P1.50 for each additional km.

"The AUV Express fare scheme would be similar to the vehicles-for-hire. The difference is the Express could charge per head. For-hire vehicles would base their fares on the distance," said Bautista.

Nanny foils abduction try

By Nancy C. Carvajal

A NANNY's presence of mind prevented abductors from running off with the five-month-old son of a television reporter in Las Piñas yesterday morning.

Three suspected members of a child trafficking syndicate were arrested yesterday after they allegedly tried to abduct the son of IBC-13 television journalist Dave Lebanes.

"The nanny (nanny) was able to run inside a neighbor's house to seek help," Lebanes said in a telephone interview. The incident took place in front of the victim's house in Sta. Cecilia Village, Las Piñas.

According to Lebanes, the child's nanny, Julie Payamay, as her habit, would take her ward out of the house for some sun every morning after he left for work.

Police said that the suspects chanced upon Payamay and offered her an undetermined amount of money in exchange for her ward.

When the nanny refused, the suspects—Nav Kamal Singh, Gian Singh and their driver Juanito Sopsip, of 1339 Mactan St., Bacalaran, Parañaque City—drove away in a maroon Starz van with plate number CSP-531.

But the suspects reportedly returned after a few minutes and tried to grab the child from the nanny's arms.

As she ran to a neighbor's house for help, other neighbors called up the village security officers who coordinated with the police in apprehending the suspects.

Responding policemen were able to stop the van after a brief chase inside the village. All entrance and exit points of the village had been closed to stop the suspects from fleeing the area.

The three denied the charges. Police said the suspects reeked of alcohol when they were arrested.

SPO2 Romeo Britanico said they would conduct further investigation to see if the suspects had any record or had been previously charged with child trafficking.

Firemen found drinking under fire

By Nelson F. Flores and Tina G. Santos

INTERIOR Secretary Angelo Reyes yesterday ordered the relief of a ranking fire official and two firemen who were caught drinking while on duty inside a fire station in Quezon City last Thursday.

At the same time, Reyes directed Interior Undersecretary for Peace and Order Marius Corpus to investigate the incident and initiate appropriate proceedings if the charges were proven.

As a consequence, Corpus ordered the relief of Fire Chief Insp. Isagani Aboc, Fire Officers 2 Rommel Montelana and Reynaldo Binuya, all of the Agham Fire Station along Agham Road.

He said Aboc was relieved based on the principle of command responsibility.

Montelana and Binuya, on the other hand, were dismissed from their posts after they were caught drinking inside the fire station.

Records showed that Quezon City Fire

Station personnel chief Romeo Rillo received reports and text messages from concerned citizens about an ongoing drinking session inside the Agham Fire Station on Thursday.

Accompanied by two policemen, Rillo went to the fire station to check the veracity of the report and found Montelana and Binuya drinking on the job.

Inappropriate wear

The two were dressed in undershirts and wore slippers, Rillo added.

A woman clad in shorts and four other unidentified men were also seen inside the station, he said.

Residents also claimed that they heard gunfire coming from the station, prompting them to report the incident to authorities.

Corpus said the firemen could be dismissed from the service if found guilty of violating the rules implementing Republic Act 6713 (the Code of Conduct and Ethical Standard for Public Officials and Employees).

Help comes to Jocelyn and Joe

By Terra V. Quismundo

SHE FELT lighter in more ways than one.

A day after giving birth to triplets, Jocelyn Cervantes now has a ready smile for her visitors. Except for occasional pains, after effects of her delivery by cesarean section, the 29-year-old first-time mother is now free from money woes that hounded her a day ago.

"Maluwag na ang pakiramdam ko (I can breathe easily now)," said Jocelyn from her bed at the ward of the Maternal High Risk and Kangaroo Mother Care Unitward of Dr. Jose Fabella Memorial Hospital, which she shares with 50 other new mothers.

The state-run hospital, where Jocelyn gave birth to three babies on Thursday morning, would shoulder the expenses of her delivery and medication, and treatment for the premature triplets who have been placed inside incubators for an indefinite period.

"Based on our social classification system, the Cervantes couple are indigents, which means that the hospital will fully subsidize all the medical needs of the triplets and the mother," said hospital director Ruben Flores.

Jocelyn and Jose were married four years ago in a mass wedding ceremony in West Fairview, Quezon City.

Jose, 25, a part-time waiter, and Jocelyn, a housewife, had been unable to prepare for the coming of one baby, let alone three. But after an evaluation of their financial status, the hospital decided to pay for all the triplets' medical needs and Jocelyn's operation and recovery.

Flores said he expects the hospital bills to run to almost P500,000.

The hospital, which charges a subsidized amount to better-off patients, had already spent P10,000 for Jocelyn's C-section delivery. For the triplets, the hospital bought three vials of surfactant, medication that helps the premature babies' lungs to mature. This medicine alone costs around P75,000.

The babies are currently being administered surfactant inside the hospital's Neonatal Intensive Care Unit while under observation, as complications may arise in their first three days, said Dr. Mary Anne Ila, attending neonatologist.

Though born underweight, Joshua Jay, Jocelyn and Jonalyn, called by the hospital staff as babies A, B and C, are doing just fine, besides predictable complications, said Ila.

"All pre-term (premature) babies face risks. But two of the babies are stable. We are just a bit worried with baby C," Ila related.

Genuine Fil-Ams cry foul

By June Navarro

SAYING it's unfair to them, a handful of Fil-Ams with unquestionable papers said yesterday they, too, hoped for an immediate resolution of the case regarding Filipino-foreign players who allegedly faked their citizenship.

Noy Castillo and Mike Hrabak, detesting the presence of questionable cagers in other ballclubs, stressed that "Fil-Shams" put the image of the genuine Fil-fors in a bad light.

"I don't have access to their papers but I think it's quite unfair to the real Fil-Ams," said Hrabak, who was traded from the Purefoods last month.

"I'm sure there's quite a few fake Fil-fors in other teams," added Castillo, a product of The Citadel in the US NCAA Division I circuit.

Talk 'N Text point guard Jimmy Alapag said he also hoped for a speedy resolution of the case, stressing "if there's a finding that we can just move on without the doubts and play basketball."

"If there's no finding, it's hard for the league, it's hard for the fans and it's going to be hard for the players because there always will be doubts," said Alapag.

Alapag's teammate, Asi Taulava, is among the players the Senate recommended for deportation last year after its findings showed they had dubious citizenship papers.

The others are Red Bull's Davonn Harp, Jon Ordonio and Mick Pennisi, Coca-Cola's Rafi Reavis and Rudy Hatfield, Barangay Ginebra's Andy Seigle and Alex Crisano and San Miguel's Dorian Peña.

Purefoods coach Ryan Gregorio and several other locals in the Hotdogs squad also sought the end of the controversy, saying fake Fil-fors give other teams undue advantage.

"FedEx, Sta. Lucia Realty, Shell and our team are always at the bottom of the standings simply because we don't have players who play like imports," said Gregorio.

Team captain and assistant playing coach Alvin Patrimonio, meanwhile, expressed satisfaction on the initiative by Sen. Lito Lapid and the Department of Justice to expedite the cases of the Fil-fors, which was shelved more than a year ago.

Red Bull airs side on brawl

"We demanded an explanation but heard nothing from the organizers; we were driven out of the tournament just like that."

pleas fell on deaf ears.

"We wasted time, effort and money after the team prepared very hard for the opening of the PBA only to get this," he added.

Enrico Villanueva triggered the melee when he punched a Korean cager for hitting the 6-foot-5 Barako in the neck with less than a minute remaining in the game.

Villanueva said authorities questioned him after the game but denied being jailed or detained after the fracas that prompted both teams to storm onto the court.

"That player was physical throughout. He kept on hitting us with cheap shots. Testing the extent of my patience, he had suddenly gotten into my nerves that I felt there was no way to defend myself but to hit him in the face," said Villanueva.

Red Bull coach Yeng Guiao said the officiating was one of the worst he had seen.

"At this level of competition, each team should bring a referee to explain to the referees of the other countries the intricacies involved in the game. Without an international referee in the delegation, it's hard to communicate," said Guiao.

Guiao added the referees obviously have neither the expertise nor experience in handling such risky situations as evidenced by the poorly officiated games they played prior to the brawl.

Since the Sulran's Cup is a PBA-sanctioned tournament, Guiao said the league should properly consider the well-being of the teams before letting ballclubs plunge into action.

"If it happened elsewhere, Enrico would be thrown out while the rest of the team plays on. The organizers disqualified the team without any explanation at all," said Chua.

Red Bull team manager Tony Chua gave this statement after the Barakos arrived yesterday from Brunei where the entire team was disqualified after a fight-marred game against a Korean ballclub in the 4th Shell Rumala Sultan's Cup.

UAAP-NCAA All-Star today

THERE'LL be an abundance of talent as newly crowned UAAP champion De La Salle and NCAA titlist Philippine Christian U lead the cast in the UAAP-NCAA All-Star Showdown today at the Araneta Coliseum.

Kicking off the event is Game 2 of the women's basketball finals between Ateneo and defending champion Adamson at 10 a.m.

Ateneo took Game 1, 67-64, last Thursday.

In the All-Star games, La Salle and Ateneo will team up this time to form the UAAP 2 squad together with standouts from UE and Adamson. They will battle the NCAA 2 team of University of Perpetual Help, San Sebastian San Beda and St. Benilde. Gametime is 5 p.m.

The NCAA 1 group of PCU, Letran, Mapua and Jose Rizal will collide with the UAAP 1 crew of Far Eastern, University of the Philippines, University of Sto. Thomas and Nacional University at 3 p.m.

Coaching UAAP 2 is La Salle's Franz Pumaren, who picked Archers Mac Cardona, Joseph Yeo, TY Tang, Jerwin Gaco, Junjun Cabatu. He added finals hero JV Casio, after Ateneo's LA Tenorio begged off due to a RP team commitment. Also in the fold are Eagles JC Inal and Paolo Bugia, UE's KG Canaleta, Paolo Hubalde and Rookie of the Year Marcy Arellano, and Adamson's Ken Bono.

NCAA 2 mentor Bau Cristobal enlisted Perpetual's Noy Javier, Khel Misa, Fritz Bauzon, Vladimir Joe, Robert Barnson and Marcel Cuenco. He added SSC's Leo Najorda, Pep Moore and Red Vicente, San Beda's Alex Angeles and Jerome Paterno, and St. Benilde's Jay Sagad.

NCAA 1 coach Loreto Tolentino will bank on PCU's rookie MVP Gabby Espinas, Robert Sanz, Ian Guindo, Mon Retaga, Jason Castro and Joel Sous. Also suiting up are Letran's Mark Andaya and Boyer Bautista, Mapua's Erwin Sta. Maria and Christian Guevarra, and JRU's Medo Santos and Marco Fajardo.

FEU's Koy Banal leads UAAP 1 with MVP Arwind Santos, RJ Rizada, Dennis Miranda, Jeff Chan, Don Yabut and Mark Isip, UP's Toti Auneda, Jireh Ibañez and Josant Cervantes, UST's Christian Luanzon and Warren de Guzman, and NU's Rey Mendoza. The event will benefit the Bantay Bata 163 child-aid project. Jasmine W. Payo

La Salle needs another great coach after Franz

By Jasmine W. Payo

AFTER the ecstasy, La Salle woke up the morning after with only a short list of possible replacements for its overachieving championship coach.

Franz Pumaren has undeniably pulled an amazing feat in college basketball after steering the Archers to five championships in seven years.

However, his impending departure has left a void that the UAAP champion team has started to feel this early.

"Many people now want him back next year. After the game, everyone was chanting 'one more year,'" said La Salle team manager Terry Capistrano. "But I think the fact that he announced it, it's a strong indication that that's it. He needs to rest. It's about time he takes a break, seven years can be tiring. So the best thing to do is to let him unwind."

Relieved

Pumaren, indeed, looked relieved after the Archers bagged the championship by unseating defending titlist Far Eastern U Tamaraws in a dramatic 68-65 victory last Thursday.

"I think I've accomplished everything any college coach could wish for," noted Pumaren, who wrapped up his seven-year stint with an impressive 98-27 win-loss record. "I've given up so many offers in the professional ranks just to coach this team, because that's how much I love coaching college basketball."

"I'm sure the school will try to talk to him. But if he'll reconsider, I think it's a remote possibility," said Capistrano.

La Salle athletic director Danny Jose is similarly doubtful. "The fact that he already announced his desire to step down, it will prompt La Salle to look for a new coach. But we give him credit for the five championships. The school will now have to look around, and maybe we'll have a short list in two to three months," he said.

Reliable

Aside from Pumaren, only forward Jerwin Gaco is leaving the team. All the other reliable players like Mac Cardona, Joseph Yeo, JV Casio, TY Tang and Ryan Araña will be back to defend the title.

Marco Batmcevic, a 6-foot-6 high school standout from La Salle Greenhills, will also beef up the Archers' roster next season.

"He's our main recruit but we're also talking to a couple of other players,"

LA Salle coach Franz Pumaren gets a victory ride after the Archers beat the Tamaraws for the UAAP title. ERNIE U. SANMIGUEL disclosed Capistrano.

"Our chances next year are still pretty good," he added.

Indeed, there seems no reason for Pumaren to worry. He has established his dynasty and legacy in La Salle.

He now leaves a team that seems poised to establish a new one. But they'll need another great coach to take them there.

JERWIN Gaco of La Salle and Arwind Santos dive for the loose ball in the final seconds of the UAAP finals. ERNIE U. SANMIGUEL

Santos torn between turning pro and staying on with FEU

MAYBE it was the frustration of coming to within a follow-up basket of the UAAP title.

Because despite a relatively colorful college career that he can close the book on, Arwind Santos feels he isn't done yet with the UAAP.

And if he can have his way, he's going to play one more season with the FEU Tamaraws next year without compromising his ultimate dream of turning professional.

"I will apply for the PBA draft next year. But if possible, I still want to play for FEU. The PBA season starts after the UAAP, so baka pwede pa. It has been done before," said Santos.

La Salle's Don Alado set the precedent in 1999. After being drafted by Alaska, the PBA's top rookie pick still led the Archers to their second straight championship before finally joining the Aces late in the year.

The next PBA rookie draft is tentatively set on Aug. 7, 2005, but the season starts in October, or just around the end of the college season.

But what has been done before was that the UAAP removed the possibility of the Alado incident happening again. In fact, University of the East's James Yap tried to do it this year, but the UAAP ruled that once a player is drafted, he is not eligible to play for his school.

"There is a rule that once your name is called in the draft you cannot play anymore in the UAAP. That still stands," said UAAP president Danny Jose.

Santos' last chance will be if he can convince next year's board to amend that ruling.

"I'm now the breadwinner. I'm also helping my brother and his family," said Santos, explaining the urge to turn pro next year.

What he can't put to words is the desire to suit up in a Tamaraw uniform one last time. Jasmine Payo

Praising Pumaren

AS I said, I expected La Salle to win. So, when the Green Archers defeated the Far Eastern University Tamaraws on Thursday, 68-65, to win the UAAP basketball title two games to one, I was the least surprised.

Hey, fellas, I am not trying to breast-beat No. 1's just that I believed La Salle had the experience, coaching-wise, period.

Never mind the players. Rookies or not, when a good coach is handling them, expect surprises to happen to the team. Even miracles.

In case you missed it, I did also say in my pre-championship forecast here yesterday that the better coach would win it.

Again, I am not trying to breast-beat No. 1's just that La Salle coach Franz Pumaren is so good, foxy even, I am still wondering why nobody's gotten hold of him in the PBA backyard up to now.

He's become too expensive, maybe? Cut the crap.

I know he gets a princely sum coaching La Salle but that doesn't mean no PBA team can afford Franz Pumaren. Don't they pay 200K a month to even a nondescript coach there? And that amount most team owners would consider starvation pay?

Give me that money and I'll readily reject a column-writing job at the New York Times—even if the offer from the Big Apple biggie beats my pay by a thousand dollars a month.

Two hundred thousand pesos a month in this country, why that's more than enough to make me live like a king in Bog-tong Silag, Mangatarem, Pangasinan.

Over there, a kilo of fish like "banak" or "pingaw" or "malaga" can be had at 70 bucks.

Over there, the folk still cherish centuries-old tradition: they allow anyone to pick ready-to-cook vegetables from the backyard without permission from the owner.

Over there, everybody owns everybody's produce: calamansi, camote tops, catulad, kang kong, string beans, patola, ampalaya, calabasa, eggplant, etc.

A bowl of panakbet, with squash flowers in it, was what I had for dinner over there Thursday, an hour or so after La

SPECTATOR

Al S. Mendoza

Salle had completed its monumental comeback to the throne since becoming a mere spectator in the UAAP Finals last year between FEU and Ateneo.

No doubt Franz Pumaren was the better coach on Thursday, although FEU coach Koy Banal could not be denied as he had put up a gallant stand in the face of adversity. In fact, I give credit to Koy in the dying seconds of the game, with the crown on the line.

With time down to 24.9, La Salle up by one, 66-65, Koy Banal devised during timeout what was supposed to be the title-winning play for the Tamaraws. Anointing Dennis "Denok" Miranda to go for the kill, Miranda however missed what could have been the most memorable shot on a night filled with thrills and triples.

Although Miranda saw himself being double-teamed, he managed to extricate himself somewhat from the right flank. Getting a view of the ring from the perimeter, he did an off-balanced takeoff and fired. Painfully, the banked shot circled the ring and rimmed out, eliciting a roar from a crowd that filled every available space at the 20,000-seat Cubao Big Dome.

In the ensuing scramble for the most important rebound of the night, Tamaraw Arwind Santos, the 6-foot-4 2004 MVP, fouled MacMac Cardona, the 6-foot-1 Archer whom Santos defeated for the MVP plum.

With 2.2 seconds left, Cardona coolly sank the free throws and next watched in delight as FEU missed a desperation shot from across the court.

After the game, Cardona said, "I kept telling my teammates, kaya natin ito, guys (We can do it, guys)."

Said Frans Pumaren of Cardona, an arm wrapped around Cardona's neck "This is my MVP."

Sure, Cardona was consistently brilliant all throughout and I raise a glass to him.

But this night of nights, I do not on y lift a glass to J-Vee Casio, whose last of three triples with 24.9 ticks left gave La Salle back the lead, 66-65, after Mark Isip put FEU on top, 65-63, on back-to-back hits with 29 seconds remaining. For J-Vee, I will lift a whole bottle of champagne.

"This is a team of destiny," said Franz Pumaren of his boys. "We believed in ourselves—that's the secret of this victory."

From 1998, Franz has given La Salle five UAAP crowns, missing just one Finals appearance in the last seven years of the league. If that's not Hall of Fame stuff, what is?

Yes, Franz, it's time to move on as what you've said in your victory speech. Yes, Franz, at the amateur backyard, there's nothing to prove anymore. PBA, here, come?

Alaska, FedEx to tour malls

MIKE Cortez of Alaska and Renren Ritualo of FedEx are expected to lead their respective teams' appearances at Robinsons Place-Manila and Robinsons-Cainta, respectively, today as part of the ongoing PBA's One-on-One at Robinsons Malls promo tour.

The Alaska and FedEx cagers will meet and greet their fans who will get the chance to have their pictures taken with their favorite players or get their autographs. Both squads will also conduct their respective team marketing days where each team will mount its own activity and do its own event.

Also on tap in the mall-hopping tour, organized by PBA Properties Inc. and supported by Ancel, FedEx and Mail and More, is the PBA interactive display, an exhibit composed of a photo gallery, hand and shoe prints, giant inflatable basketballs, graffiti wall, and a half-court.

The PBA interactive centers are set up on two designated Robinsons malls each week til. Oct. 31 to be spaced up by a rotation of visits by the PBA cagers and teams.

The activities at Robinsons Place-Manila and Robinsons-Cainta will end tomorrow with Robinsons-Novaiches and Robinsons-Illus hosting the event Oct. 4-10.

The event is also expected to drum up interest in the pro league, which kicks off its new season tomorrow featuring San Miguel Beer against Talk 'N Text in the One Philippines Cup at the Araneta Coliseum.

Red Bull and Barangay Ginebra players will visit Robinsons-Novaiches and Robinsons-Illus, respectively, on Oct. 9.

The mall-hopping tour will then visit Robinsons-Pampanga and Robinsons-Dasmariñas on Oct. 11-17 featuring Shell and Sta. Lucia, respectively, while Coca-Cola and San Miguel will be at Robinsons-San Juan and Robinsons-Metro East when the event is next staged on Oct. 18-24.

The series winds up on Oct. 25-31 with Talk 'N Text and Purefoods guesting at Robinsons-Lipa and Robinsons-Gallena, respectively.

ANJA Vanessa Peter, a 17-year-old German student, prepares to return a serve by Chin Seul Ki of South Korea. Peter won.

HK duo drubs RP pair for boys' doubles title

TOP SEEDS Martin Sayer and Lai Xiao Peng of Hong Kong bagged the boys' doubles title by drubbing the second-ranked Filipino pair of Kyle Joshua Dandan and Ralph Kevin Barte, 7-6 (5), 6-3, yesterday in the 2004 Enervon Tablet Futures Foundation International Juniors Tennis Championships at the Ynares Socio-Cultural Sports Center in Pasig City.

Sayer had earlier advanced to the singles final, beating seventh-seed Ralph Kevin Barte, 6-2, 6-2.

Sayer, ranked No. 174 in the ITF Juniors and the singles top seed, will meet unranked local Nico Riego De Dios at 9 a.m. today.

Riego De Dios pulled off a 7-6 (8), 6-2 upset win over second-ranked Taiwanese Chang Hui-en in the other semifinal match of the event also supported by Unilab, adidas, Prince rackets, Toby's, Nassau balls and Holiday Inn Manila Galleria.

"Chang is an offensive player so I need to change the pace of my ball," said Riego De Dios of Olongapo City.

Riego De Dios, training under former

Davis Cupper Beeyong Sison in the Subic Bay International Tennis Academy, expects a strong challenge against the big-serving Sayer.

"Sayer has a good forehand and it will be tough to beat him. But I will do my best," said the 17-year-old Riego De Dios, who also trained in the United States last year.

Playing in the girls' singles final a so set at 9 a.m. today are third-seed Filipino-German Anya Vanessa Peter and fifth-seed Japanese Ayumi Okuma.

Peter, 17, ousted top seed Korean Chun Seul Ki, 6-4, 6-1, while Okuma, a 14-year-old netter from Chiba City, outclassed seventh-ranked Korean Jeong Yoon Young, 6-0, 6-1.

"I'm happy to be in the final. I think it will be a tough match. Okuma can play hard and flat ball. She's tough," said the 5-foot-8 Peter, who had competed in European Tennis Association tournaments and was a sem finalist in two ITF Juniors Circuit.

Peter, whose mother is a Filipino, was born in Saudi Arabia and grew up in Moelfelden-Waldorf town in Germany.

Meanwhile, today is the start of the two-day qualifying round of the PBA Group International Juniors Championships slated Oct. 4-10.

SEA Canoe Championships attract 10 national squads

SUBIC BAY—Familiarity of the venue gives Filipino athletes an edge in their bid to provide worthy competition against favored rivals in the fifth Southeast Asian Canoe Championships and the 3rd Junior Southeast Asian Canoe Championships which start today in Subic, Zambales.

Thus was the assessment of RP team coach Leonor Escollante who has been training her athletes since three weeks ago at the waterfront of the Fisherman's Wharf Resort inside the Subic Bay Freeport Zone.

Leading the host team's bid are Jonard Saren, Southeast Asian record holder of the 1000-m junior kayak single and Ryan Romaldi Tabagan. Top bet for the 1000-m KI is 17-year-old Marvin Amposta who will compete in both the junior and seniors competitions.

Norwell Cajay, who has been a consistent performer in the national pool's time trial, is expected to excel in the 100-m canoe singles.

April Mae Peñalosa, holder of the SEA junior 200-m kayak single, is the top bet in the women's side.

The Philippines grinds it out for three days against nine other Southeast Asian countries, including powerhouse teams Indonesia, Vietnam, Myanmar and Thailand which are expected to crowd it out at the top.

A total of 48 gold medals are up for grabs in the event supported by the PSC, PCSO, Philippine Convention and Visitors Corp., SBMA, Subic Fisherman's Wharf Resort, Subic International Hotel, SMC, Viva Mineral Water, Smart Addict Mobile, McDonalds-Olongapo, Coppertone Sport, Tibu Sandals, Subic Bay Medical Center, Astron Communication Systems, IDG Productions and Penta-Shumazu-Toa Joint Venture.

Filipina booters suffer loss

THE PHILIPPINE women's football squad suffered a 1-0 defeat at the hands of Indonesia Thursday evening but remained in contention in the Asean Football Federation (AFF) Women's Championship in Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam.

A moment's loss of concentration just 10 minutes after kickoff gifted Indonesia with the winning goal in spite of the Filipinas' domination of the last 65 minutes of their inaugural contest. A cracking 30-yard blast by Letecia Baudista before half time almost pulled the fighting Filipinas even. They continued the same attacks in the second half, keeping the Indonesians on the defensive until the last second of the match.

Now in a must-win situation to advance into the semifinal round, the Philippines takes on Singapore this afternoon (Saturday) at 3 p.m.

AMATEUR TOUR

Saragoza coasts to victory

LIPA, Batangas—Former national player Boyet Saragoza kept a tight watch on Jun Bernis to score a five-stroke victory in the championship division despite a bogey-bogey finish in the fifth leg of the Samsung Amateur Tour eliminations at the Mt. Malarayat Golf and Country Club in Lipa, Batangas.

Saragoza never allowed Bernis, the reigning national amateur champ, to come closer than four strokes early in the final round as he even went up by seven to complete the rout with a closing three-over-par 75 for a 72-hole aggregate of 293.

Bernis, down by five after Round 3, inched to within four twice but couldn't get any closer. The Puerto Rico World Amateur-bound player had a 75 and ended in a tie with Dave Hernandez at 298.

Hernandez, who recently won the Malarayat mid-amateur title, capped a big rally from a woeful 81 in the opening round with a 72.

Saragoza thus joined Juvie Paguntan and three others in next year's grand finals of the tourney also sponsored by Tokyo Tokyo, Gatorade, Philippine Airlines, adidas Taylor Made, KZG by Custom Clubmakers, Pink Pato Boracay, Copperstone Sport and Rogin E. Killer-Bee, Jam 88.3, Wave 89.1, Magic 89.9, 99.5 RT and 103.5 K-Lite are media partners.

Lina de Guzman, another ex-national player, was unchallenged in ladies Class A with his second straight one-under 71, good for a 16-stroke win over Samantha Cebreno (80-158).

Pitong Quiocbo recovered from a three-shot deficit to beat Rodel Mangulabnan by a stroke for the men's Class A plum. Quiocbo shot 73-152 while Mangulabnan stumbled with a 77-153.

The other men's division winners were: Emil Alviar who romped to a five-shot win in Class B with an 81-158, Art dela Fuente (86-169) in Class C, and Joven Papio (95-184) in Class D.

In the ladies category, Rita Hozan (Class B) and Yoon Mijung (Class C) beat jungolfers Frances Bawa and Andie Unson, respectively, for the crown.

The eliminations move to the Camp John Hay course in Baguio for the sixth leg on Oct. 19-22.

Buhain congratulates Archers

PHILIPPINE Sports Commission Chair Eric Buhain yesterday expressed high hopes that the show of support and unity in the UAAP would be replicated by the whole nation as "one big school" rallying behind national athletes competing in the 2005 Southeast Asian Games. Buhain, a La Salle Zobel and De La Salle Philadelphia alumnus, congratulated the De La Salle Green Archers for winning the 2004 JAAP men's seniors basketball crown and also commended runner-up Far Eastern University Tamaraws. Buhain, a back-to-back recipient of the Best Male Athlete award of the 1989 and 1991 Sea Games, also served as head coach of the De La Salle University swimming team.

SLCUAA semis begins today

SEMI-FINAL hostilities in the 5th Southern Luzon Colleges and Universities Athletic Association (SLCUAA) volleyball competitions begin today with a heavy 12-game bill at the Brent International School Manila. Elimination round leader San Pedro College of Business Administration rounds out the six-game schedule at Court 1 against University of Perpetual Help Delta System-Calamba in women's action at 2:15 p.m., followed by the JPHDS-Molino-Brent women's clash at 1 p.m. St. Joseph Academy takes on Brent at 8 a.m. while St. Francis of Assisi College System-Bayanan battles Colegio San Agustin-Binan at 9:15 a.m., both in the 14-Under Division.

First Partners Cup on today

THE FIRST Partners Cup 2004 invitational badminton tournament among business partners of Robinsons Land Corp. will be held today at the Asuncion Badminton Center in San Juan, Metro Manila. At least 250 participants and guests comprising executives, contractors and suppliers of RLC are entered in six categories in the tournament that will be spiced up by exhibition matches of television and movie celebrities and national champions, including one from Indonesia. Paolo Bediones, host of the top-rated reality show Extra Challenge, will play with former beauty queen and film actress Daisy Reyes in one of the special doubles matches.

Derby aficionados gather at Roligon

THOUSANDS of derby aficionados from Metro Manila, Quezon, Cavite, Batangas, Laguna, Rizal, Bulacan, Pampanga, Bataan and Pangasinan troop to Roligon Mega Cockpit today as they provide support to their respective heroes as new, upcoming and veteran gamefowl breeders clash for recognition and supremacy. A joint undertaking of Roligon and Thunderbird Power Feeds for the past nine years, the Stag Festival Derby has provided the right stage for budding rooster-raisers to test and showcase their yearly produce. This 2004 edition stakes P1,000,000 in guaranteed cash prizes for an entry fee of P6,600. Also in support of this derby are Lakpoo Drug and Casino Filipino.

Mendoza entry prevails anew

FAST-RISING gamefowl breeder engineer Arthur Mendoza of Golden Warriors Farm in Agoncillo, Batangas continues to dominate the stag derby scene after scoring four wins out of four matches to outclass 61 other entries during last Thursday's 4-stag derby at the Daang-Hari Coliseum in Baguio. Mendoza, riding high from a runner-up finish in the recent 112-entry Ray-Showdown 7-Stag contest at Roligon Mega Cockpit and a conquest of a 4-stag event in Candelaria, Quezon, Mendoza is proving to be an emerging force in local cockfighting. A college buddy of sweater king Sonny Lagon of Blue Blade Farm, Mendoza has been making a name for himself since he started raising fighting cocks two years ago.

ACCI 9-ball tourney slated

THE 1ST Architectural Center Club no. 9-ball tournament will be held on Friday, Oct. 8, at the ACCI clubhouse on Palma St. in Makati City. The format for the series, meant to foster goodwill among club members, will be round-robin, race to five racks. Composing the tournament committee are Joel Songson, chair; Berlin Manaloto, director; Conrado Balderama, technical committee chair; Francisco Rameno Jr., officio member. All members and their friends are enjoined to register and join the tournament.

Fujian team tests local lady cagers

A TEAM from Fujian province in China is arriving today via Philippine Airlines to slug it out with four local squads in the 2nd National Women's Invitational Basketball Championship set Oct. 4-9 at the Raza Memorial Coliseum.

The Chinese team, represented by Motorstar Motorcycle Women's Selection Team, is headed by Peter Ty and team leader Lu Lian Jie.

Testing the mettle of the visitors are the RP national women's team of coach Bay Crisbal, Philippine Maritime Institute, champion in the Colleges and Universities Sports Associations (Cusa) and a selection from the National Athletic Association of Schools, Colleges and Universities (Nanscu) and Bulacan State University of the Philippine Schools, Colleges, Universities Athletic Association (PSCUAA).

The five teams will play a single round robin elimination in this tournament organized by the Basketball Association of the Philippines (BAP) in cooperation with the Philippine Integrated Chinese Athletic Association (Picaa). The team with the best card will be the champion.

Graham Lim, BAP secretary general, said the opening game will be graced by BAP president Quinteliano Lateral, BAP executive vice president Christian Tan, Picaa president Alvin Tai, Philippine Sports Commissioner William Ramirez, and former Tarlac representative Peping Cojuangco, president of the Philippine Equestrian Association. The Cojuangco clan, including former President Corason C. Aquino, traces its roots to Fujian, China.

Also expected to grace the opening ceremonies are Philippine Olympic Committee chair and taekwondo chief Robert Aventajado, Philippine Amateur Athletic Association (Patafa) president Go Teng Kok and judo head director Reynal do Jaylo.

TROUBLE-FREE WIN

Murakami rules Riviera

FORMER national champion Artemio Murakami coasted to a trouble-free victory in the third Riviera Amateur Golf Championship yesterday, firing a one-under par 70 and beating Jay Bayron by six strokes at Riviera's Langer course in Silang, Cavite.

A birdie on the tricky par-4 18th capped Murakami's impressive performance in the tournament. He shot a 68 in the first round and used this as the springboard to rout the field that included two of the mainstays of the national team competing in next month's World Amateurs in Puerto Rico.

He was never seriously threatened from Day One and, counting his 74 and 71 in the middle rounds, Murakami closed out with a 283.

Bayron, six down at the start of the day, tried to apply the pressure early with a birdie on No. 1 but Murakami simply matched the feat and virtually spent the day fine-tuning his swing and polishing his putting stroke.

Bayron holed out with a 70 and took runner-up honors with a 289.

Eastwile joint second Marvin Dumandan moved to within four strokes after nine holes with a 34 but three bogeys in the last six holes slowed down his bid.

He settled for a 72 and wound up third with a 291.

Juvic Pagunsan, who, with Michael Bibat and Jim Bernis, will banner the RP team in the Puerto Rico bash next month, limped with a 72 and finished a disappointing fourth at 295.

Worse was Bibat, who wound up seventh in the event sponsored by Pacsports and DHL with a 302 after a 73 behind Ray Sangil (73-300) and Gene Bondoc (73-301).

Generals top UCAA hoops

THE EMILIO Aguinaldo College Generals bagged the 3rd Universities and Colleges Athletics Association (UCAA) men's basketball crown unbeaten following an 85-79 victory over the Philippine School of Business Administration Jaguars in the finals Thursday night at the Pasay Sports Complex.

Ron Jayson Buenaflor, voted as the league's Most Valuable Player (MVP), provided the spark for the Generals with a game-high 24 points, including eight in the crucial stretch.

They cut short the best-of-three title series, 2-0, and completed a record 17-0 romp of the two-month long meet backed by Moiten and Mikasa balls, New Balance shoes, Arena swimwear, Arceel, Villa de Oro Resorts Boracay and Shakey's Pizza.

Filipino AF3
bets struggle

BOGOR, Indonesia—Indonesian Ananda Mikola posted the fastest times in the first two of three official practice races Friday at the Sentul International Circuit and emerged as the driver to beat in the fourth leg of the Pertamina Fasttron Asian Formula 3 Grand Prix.

Mikola, the 24-year-old son of the circuit's owner, clocked 1:25.2 in the first practice race and matched that time in his second practice race an hour later, easily outracing Christian Jones, the series leader, and Ireland's John O'Hara.

Jones clocked a second-best time of 1:25.6 in the first practice race and did a third-best 1:26.2 in the second race as against the 1:25.8 and 1:25.6 of O'Hara.

Defending champion Pepon Marave, who has lent the car he drove to victory last year to O'Hara, was fourth fastest in the second practice race, clocking 1:27.2.

Young gun Tyson Sy, competing in the promotions class, outshone the veterans in the field, among them Mark Goddard of Great Britain and fellow Filipino Richard Joson.

Filipino Enzo Pastor continued to struggle while compatriot Dado Peña failed to finish practice for the second straight day.

Trinidad vows RP trade team in thick of the fight to KO Mayorga

NEW YORK—Puerto Rico's Felix Trinidad returns to boxing after a 29-month layoff here Saturday in a 12-round welterweight show down against Nicaraguan Ricardo Mayorga.

Trinidad, 41-1 with 34 knockouts, is coming out of retirement in his first fight since losing to undisputed middleweight champion Bernard Hopkins here three years ago.

"I'm going to win. I'm well prepared to win by knockout or by decision if that's the way it comes," Trinidad said.

"I'm so calm and confident in my victory. I have my mind set for victory."

Mayorga, 27-4 with one draw and 23 knockouts, has talked tough about making Trinidad's return a brief one. "Trinidad will wish he never came out of retirement after he fights me. I will send him back to Puerto Rico on a stretcher," AFP

LLOYD Reynante kept the RP-Pagcor Casino Filipino Trade Team in the thick of the fight of the Dji Sam Soe Tour of Indonesia cycling classic by finishing third in Stage 4 from Semarang to Yogyakarta Thursday.

Reynante made a breakaway bid at the halfway mark before yielding to Iranian Ghader Mizbani and Taiwanese Lai Kuan Hua, who made it a 1-2 finish for the Giant Asia Racing Team.

Reynante, the 2004 Tour Pilipinas runner-up, covered the 147.7-km uphill-downhill grind in four hours, 54 minutes and 10 seconds to duplicate his third-place finish in the second lap Tuesday.

Despite favoring an injured right leg, Mizbani asserted his billing as one of Asia's best climbers to top the lap in 4:49:51.

GMA wishes cyclists good luck

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo has wished members of the national team good luck in their campaign in the 10th Asian Mountain Bike Championships which will be staged Oct. 7 to 10 in Puerto Princesa City.

In her message to the team members and organizers led by PhilCy-cling, headed by Bert Lana, and Puerto Princesa City, under Mayor Edward Hagedorn, the President also underscored cycling's role in achieving a Strong Republic.

"Cycling, like most others sports, develops patience, perseverance and mental toughness crucial to the formation of well-rounded individuals who make something of themselves for the benefit of the country," wrote the president.

"Conquering rugged terrain and foul weather shows the triumph of the human spirit against overwhelming odds," she added.

The coolest family destinations are just folds away.

Hagedorn lauds sepak takraw team

MAYOR Edward Hagedorn praised Puerto Princesa City's sepak takraw team for helping the Philippines to a third-place finish overall in the fourth Brunel-Indonesia-Malaysia-Philippines East Asian Growth Area Friendship Games in Kota Kinabalu, Malaysia. The Puerto Princessa team is composed of athletes Jojie Gental, Roel Anosa, Janier Casbay and Raffy Dagaraga.

Three shoot for WNCAA semis

THREE squads fight it out today for the last two semifinal slots in the WNCAA basketball tournament at the St. Scholastica's College gym. Rizal Technological U battles semifinalist Lyceum at 12:30 p.m., seeking win No. 8 that would give them the third slot. At 5 p.m., Centro Escolar University (5-2) will have the chance to settle the final with a victory over Miriam College (5-3).

Hurting Tiger trails by 2

THOMASTOWN, Ireland—Tiger Woods hardly looked like himself until a painful first round at the American Express Championship was over and he signed for a 4-under 68, two shots out of the lead at a tournament he has won the last two years.

On the practice range, he swung like an amateur getting ready for a Wednesday pro-am round on the PGA Tour.

Attribute that to a back injury that made him wince, grip his teeth, buckle his knees and generally look miserable.

British Open champion Todd Hamilton, who took the lead with a 6-under 66 and heard the stories about Woods' injury, chalked it up to something else.

"Even if the guy is healthy or hurt, he's got a big heart," Hamilton said. "The guy never gives up."

Hamilton has a claret jug from winning the British Open. What really helped him Thursday was a hot putter, which can feel like a magic wand on the pure greens of Mount Juliet.

Hamilton made birdie putts of 20 and 15 feet early in his round, then finished it in style. He made four straight birdies, and even his lone bogey on the final hole didn't keep him out of the lead.

"The putter felt good the whole day," he said. "If you can't putt these greens, you can't putt, because the greens are spectacular."

Hamilton wasn't alone. Adam Scott recovered from a three-putt from 3½ feet—including one of 16 inches—for a double bogey on No. 11 by making birdie on five of his last six holes for a 67.

Also one shot behind was the winning Ryder Cup trio of Sergio Garcia, Luke Donald and Miguel Angel Jimenez, along with Stuart Appleby and Steve Flesch.

Woods' injury is in his upper back, although he traces it to ribs not gliding properly, and he often closed his left arm over his chest after each swing.

Federer, Roddick advance

BANGKOK, Thailand—Top-ranked Roger Federer trounced Swiss compatriot Ivo Heuberger, 6-1, 6-3, Thursday and cruised in to the Thailand Open quarterfinals.

Second seeded Andy Roddick also advanced after rallying to move past fellow American Jeff Morrison, 6-2, 6-7 (4), 6-4.

Federer finished the first set in just 20 minutes, but struggled a little in the second and needed four match points to win the match.

"He hung in there, and after 5-1, it was the toughest game in the match," said Federer, who won three of four Grand Slam titles this year.

Heuberger entered the match with a sore tooth, a condition Federer exploited.

"I knew he was not 100 percent and I knew I could take advantage of that," Federer said. "He must be 100 percent to beat me."

After losing the second set, Roddick got a break in the deciding set and went on to lead 5-4. But it wasn't until the seventh match point that he was able to end the tight match with a forehand winner.

"I missed easy shots and missed easy points," Roddick acknowledged to reporters afterward.

He next faces Thomas Johansson of Sweden, who beat Chile's Adnan Garcia, 6-3, 6-3.

Marat Safin booked his quarterfinals berth with a hard fought 6-3, 6-4 win over the Czech Republic's Jiri Vanecek.

Fourth-seeded Paradorn Srichaphan, the hometown favorite, was the last player to reach the quarterfinal with a 6-0, 7-6 (4) victory over American Alex Bogomolov Jr. AP

Rodman eyes comeback; Fox calls it quits

DENVER—Former NBA rebounding champion Dennis Rodman's attempt at a comeback at age 43 took another step when he participated in an informal workout with the Denver Nuggets on Thursday.

"Talk to other players and they'll say that wasn't a 43-year old guy that was running today," Rodman told the Rocky Mountain News. "That wasn't a 43-year old guy. That was a freak out there."

Meanwhile, in Los Angeles, Rick Fox retired on Thursday and ended a 13-year pro career during which he was part of three NBA championship teams with the Los Angeles Lakers.

Fox, beset by injuries last season, was traded by the Lakers to the Celtics on Aug. 6.

The 35-year-old forward averaged a career-low 4.8 points last season, when the Lakers were beaten by Detroit in the NBA Finals. AP TIGER Woods, who injured his back after sleeping awkwardly in his private plane, grimaces as he plays out of the rough.

Cayabyab composes music for 'Birhen ng Caysasay'

By Nestor U. Torre

RYAN Cayabyab, the country's top composer of original Filipino musicals, is writing the music for the songs for the new Marian musical "Mapaghimalang Kamay ng Birhen ng Caysasay," which will be staged at the CCP's Little Theater from Dec. 7 to 10, before being taken on a performance tour of Batangas, Laguna and neighboring provinces.

Ryan, who was recently named the Gawad CCP's awardee for music, has agreed to do the songs for the show partly because his late mother came from Batangas. Also, his first Marian musical, "Magnificat," has become a big popular and critical hit, so a similarly powerful, moving and insightful follow-up is clearly in order.

Special presentation

"Mapaghimalang Kamay ng Birhen ng Caysasay" is a special presentation of the Cultural Center of the Philippines, the Taal CHARM Foundation, Inc., Blessed Virgin of Caysasay Foundation, Inc. and the Taal Heritage Foundation, Inc.

The production's executive producer is the acclaimed sculptor, Ramon Orina. It has been mounted to give thanks and pay tribute to the

MIA KIRSHNER

Spencer (Jesse Bradford) moves to L.A. and takes a job in the mailroom of a large company, where he encounters (Mia Kirshner), whom he has been in love with since elementary school. As an aspiring writer, Spencer decides to be content to be her friend and hope that she will eventually come around. While waiting, he moves in with two "film makers" who are actually shooting a porn film, giving him a series of strange adventures.

Cinematic gems at Australian festival

BANA. Portrays real-life criminal in "Chopper."

By Noelani Torre

MORE and more people nowadays are beginning to realize that Hollywood isn't the only source of foreign films. Cinema flourishes in other parts of the world, too, and it is largely through film festivals that we have access to non-Hollywood fare we'd have otherwise missed (Of course, watching at home can't really equal the big screen experience.)

Glimpse of the best

One source of good, even brilliant, films is the Land Down Under, which boasts of a thriving film industry and hordes of luminous talents. The second Australian Film Festival had 10 films in its line-up:

"Chopper" (written and directed by Andrew Dominik) tells the tale of real-life criminal Mark "Chopper" Read, upon whose bestselling book, "From the Inside," the movie was based. Played with riveting intensity by Australia's Hollywood star, Eric Bana, "Chopper" is a gripping 90-minute look at the workings of a sociopath's mind.

This isn't a movie that will appeal to everybody, but it's certainly one that can't be ignored. Not surprisingly, it also brought Bana, who was then a stand-up comedian (who'd have thought?), international attention, which in turn paved the way for his successful Hollywood breakthrough.

If "Chopper" reinforces the commonly held view that Australians are strange ducks, "Walking on Water" shows us how refreshingly normal they can be. In a cinematic tradition populated by odd-balls and eccentrics, the ordinary, grief-stricken characters of this lovely film stand out in their "everyman-ness."

Humorous

With its unsentimental and, at times, darkly humorous take on death, mourning, and the evolution of relationships, "Walking on Water" is our hands-down favorite

Directed by Tony Ayres, with an outstanding screenplay by Roger Monk, the film is blessed with an excellent cast in Vince Colosimo, Maria Theodorakis, Judi Farr and Nathaniel Dean.

In direct contrast to the melancholic laughs of "Walking on Water" is the sunny, youthful hilarity of "Garage Days." Written and directed by "The Crow" director Alex Proyas, the film tells the story of a not so talented garage band wanting to make it big.

Though some of its gags fall flat on its face, the movie makes up for it in visual style (think Proyas' earlier flicks lightened up by sunlight and a strong dose of pop) and energy.

Another lighthearted comedy is "Better Than Sex," directed by Jonathan Teplitzky, and starring Susie Porter and David Wenham.

Candid

Though it suffers from too heavy directorial handling, its candid way of looking at sex and the sheer charm of Porter and Wenham manage to drag the movie back to its feet.

Judging from the quality of films in this and last year's festivals, we have no doubt that Australia still has many more cinematic gems to offer, and we're definitely looking forward to next year's edition. That the festival has also been free thus far is icing on the cake.

miraculous image of Our Lady of Caysasay, which for 400 years now has been the beloved spiritual helper of the residents of Taal, Batangas and its environs

Awareness

The show's producers trust that the new musical will help spread awareness of and devotion to Our Lady, who has been credited with interceding with her son, Jesus Christ, for many miraculous cures that have been documented through the years.

One of the most celebrated miracles, which is highlighted in the musical production, is the story of Haybing, a Chinese stonemason, who was brought back from the dead after being decapitated during the Sangleys uprising in the 16th century.

The staging of "Birhen ng Caysasay" also marks the 50th anniversary of the Virgin's canonical coronation by Fernando Cardinal Quiroga y Palacios, who was sent to Taal by Pope Pius XII, and the 150th year of the promulgation of the Dogma on the Immaculate Conception

The musical's story begins in modern times, with a family coming home to pray for a healing. The female protagonist is a teenager, to make it easier for young audiences to relate to the tradition surrounding the Virgin.

The teenager starts out unable to relate to the Caysasay devotion, but she's brought back to witness the dramatic events 400 years ago, and thus gains a deep understanding of and appreciation for the honored tradition.

Devotees

Devotees and organizations who want to sponsor a performance of the musical at the CCP are asked to call 781-5918, 780-9210, 0919 206-5424 or email orlana@info.com.ph.

The musical recalls how, four centuries ago, the beloved image was netted by a fisherman, Juan Mamingkad, in Taal's Pansipit River.

Discovery

The discovery of the miraculous image has resulted in a fervent devotion that has built a national and now even international community of Marian devotees. To underscore this, invitations have been extended for the musical to be performed abroad.

For his part, Ryan is himself a devotee. Aside from "Magnificat," he has composed music for other religious presentations. His landmark musicals include "Katy!" "Larawan, The Musical," and shows based on Rizal's novels, the "Noli" and "Fili."

ARTIST'S stylized rendition shows how the Virgin's image was found in a fisherman's net in 1603.

Looking good

A POPULAR slogan says, "Look good, feel good." But, in our attempt to look nice, we use cosmetic products that may actually cause damage to our health and well being.

This is the message of Christine Farlow's book, "Dying to Look Good." Some people suffer in their quest for physical perfection.

Essential

We know that we should be careful about what we eat, drink or inhale. But, very few of us realize that what we put on our skin may affect the protection and maintenance of our health. The skin's permeability allows certain chemicals to be absorbed and directed to the bloodstream.

Farlow writes: "Many of the ingredients we use in cosmetics are toxic, even if they don't cause an immediate reaction. Sometimes, they cause cancer. From 1978 to 1980, the FDA analyzed 300 cosmetic samples for carcinogenic contamination. Forty percent of the samples analyzed contained carcinogens. Farlow cites that the use of hair dye could increase the risk of multiple myeloma, Hodgkin's disease, etc.

NVC's 'Cabaret' opens Nov. 5

THE NEW Voice Company celebrates its 10th anniversary with the international hit musical, "Cabaret," with songs by John Kander and Fred Ebb, and book by Joe Masteroff. The Oscar-winning musical also won Tony awards for best revival, best score, best direction and best actress in 1999.

Live theater

The New Voice Company promises a show that will redefine the potential of live theater to mesmerize and influence an audience. Sam Mendes' revival is different because the characters are allowed to explore their sexuality. The musical juxtaposes two love stories—the landlady and her Jewish suitor, and Cliff and Sally—whose descent is chronicled by the Emcee.

The Manila production boasts of a stellar cast. Monique Wilson stars as Sally Bowles. Joining Monique is an incredible cast of 21, which includes Michael Williams (as Cliff ford Bradshaw), Jamie Wilson (as the Emcee), Joy Virata (as Fraulein Schneider), Leo Rualp and Bonggoy Manahan (alternating as Herr Schultz), Lynn Sherman (as Fraulein Kost), John Mulhall (as Ernst Ludwig), with Roselyn Perez, Tami Morosod, Jenny Jamora, Pheona Baranda, Amparo Sietereales, Lily Chu, April Celmar, Ronaou San Pedro and Nikki Ventosa as the Kit Kat girls, and Joel Trinidad, Jake Macapagal, Arnel Mendoza and Elnard Arellano as the Kit Kat boys. The show features the popular Ugoy Ugoy band as the Kit Kat band.

Prism of history

"Cabaret" is an "astonishing artistic expression of life at the brink of the millennium, as seen through the prism of history." It explores Berlin's seamy underworld. Critics have hailed this modern revival as "stunning" and "spellbinding."

The NVC production is based on the revised Broadway production of Sam Mendes, and is strictly for adults only. Executive producer is Rossana Abueva, with direction by Monique Wilson and Rito Asilo, choreography by Dexter Santos, light design by Martin Esteve, set design by Denis Lagdameo, vocal supervision by John Mulhall and musical direction by Bond Samson.

"Cabaret" goes onstage at the Music Museum from Nov. 5 to Dec. 4 (with Friday and Saturday evening performances at 8 p.m. for the first three weekends, and Thursday, Friday and Saturday evening shows at 8 p.m. for the final two weeks).

Call New Voice at 896-6695, 896-5497, or Ticketworld at 891-9999.

Ariel Rivera returns to acting

RIVERA. Hands-on dad.

By Remy Umerez

WHEN the teleserye, "Forever in My Heart," was offered to Ariel Rivera, the singer wanted to make sure that the storyline was good, and that shooting wouldn't take him away from wife Gelbie and their kids for long periods of time.

Private life

"There had been good offers, but there are things in show business that I am not comfortable with. I don't want my private life dragged into the scene. I don't regret losing those intrusive movie offers," he shares.

Ariel went into the pizza business in San Fernando, Pampanga, where the market is not as competitive. In Manila, he manages a motor shop.

Formative years

The Riveras personally raise their children. They don't approve of jays because they don't want their children to become close to pannies. "Gelli and I want to guide them in their formative years," Ariel says.

He reveals that "Forever in My Heart" is very light and devoid of hysterics. "Nagustuhan ko kasi it's quiet, walang sampalan."

In "Forever in My Heart," the story revolves around Raphael

Cruzaldo (Richard Gomez), a man with a dark past. Regine Velasquez is a wedding planner, a hopeless romantic who believes in signs and soulmates. Ariel plays Michael Bernabe, who questions his love for the woman he's about to marry when he meets Regine's character.

Big difference

How different is acting on TV and in the movies? "There's a big difference. On TV, you have to finish many sequences a day. There's nothing you can do kung nakukulang ka sa performance mo. Everybody's in a hurry. But, I have learned how to adjust to it," he says.

Artists help protect Arroceros Forest Park's trees

ACCLAIMED visual artist Araceli ("Cheloy") Limaco Dans is calling on film producers to "help save trees by making movies that will help people realize the crucial need to supply oxygen for future generations."

MONTAGE

"Our mountains are bald. We no longer have trees to offer floods and pollution." Cheloy has been prompted to make this call because she's currently involved in saving the trees at the Arroceros Forest Park beside the Metropolitan Theater. To dramatize the need to make the metropolis green again, Cheloy and other visual artists have been conducting painting sessions at the beleaguered park.

She shares: "I painted this beautiful tree (see photo) at the park. Note that the younger trees stand one meter apart, rooted among 3,500 other trees."

"These trees still stand in graceful elegance and dignity, with their verdant loveliness continuously supplying oxygen to thousands of Manilaños for miles around."

"To quote Joyce Kilmer: 'Only God can make a tree.' Does man have the right to chop down trees to make way for concrete structures? Who will benefit from reported plans to chop down even a few trees at the park—contractors, teachers, government officials? Is ownership of the land an excuse to chop down even one tree?"

"Most important of all, is depriving future generations of oxygen in exchange for concrete structures not a moral question?"

Cheloy concludes by urging other artists to do their share to keep the Arroceros Forest Park green. She informs us that, every Sunday at 9 a.m., artists will paint different activities at the park. The paintings resulting from this weekly activity will be exhibited early next year to raise funds for the movement.

What about presenting small plays, poetry readings, art happenings, and video and film shoots at the park? Any effort to protect the park will be deeply appreciated.

National Catholic Family Bible Quiz

The Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines' Permanent Committee for International Eucharistic Congresses, Episcopal Commission on Biblical Apostolate, and Episcopal Commission on Family and Life, in cooperation with Columbia International Food

CHELOY Dans painted this venerable, old tree at the park.

Products Inc., are launching the National Catholic Family Bible Quiz.

The event is being held in celebration of the International Year of the Eucharist and the Marian Year. It seeks to strengthen family ties, increase knowledge of and love for the Bible, bring the Church closer to families, deepen Gospel values in the family, and foster love for the Eucharist and the Blessed Mother.

Participation is open to church-wed Catholic couples with two or three children who are ready to study the bible with a catechist or Bible animator.

There will be a Diocesan Competition, followed by a regional tilt, then the National Finals. Diocesan winners will compete in the Regionals on Nov. 26 in Cebu, Dec. 3 in Davao, Dec. 10 in Pampanga, and Dec. 14 in Makati.

The National Finals will be held on Jan. 20, 2005 at the Makab Peninsula, Makati City. Winners get P50,000 (first prize), P30,000 (second), P20,000 (third) and P10,000 (consolation prize), and their catechists will get P25,000, P15,000, P10,000 and P5,000, respectively.

'Napoleon' on Hallmark Channel

For its opening salvo this month on "Movie Premieres" at 9 p.m., the Hallmark Channel screens the four-part "Napoleon." Part 1 premieres on Oct. 7, Part 2 on Oct. 14, Part 3 on Oct. 21 and Part 4 on Oct. 28.

With its top-caliber, award-winning international cast, "Napoleon" is a landmark miniseries that chronicles the tumultuous life of Napoleon Bonaparte.

'The Swan' and 'Born Diva' compared

By Nestor U. Torre

"THE SWAN" on Studio 23 has impressed viewers with its "total" makeovers. But, some people have expressed doubts about the authenticity of the transformative processes involved. They believe that the show's "ducklings" aren't as "ugly" as they seem to be, so their emergence as beautiful "swans" is more illusion than fact.

To convince the doubters, the show has released detailed reports on some of its 16 contestants. Take Rachel Love-Fraser, who was the winner in the show's pilot episode. The married office worker from Washington was made to undergo seven procedures and lost 32 pounds in three months.

Favorite fantasy

Cristina Tyree is an office administrator

from California. Her tummy tuck was one of the most radical ever performed by the show's cosmetic surgeons. She was very happy to lose the fat around her midsection, so she could seriously take up her favorite fantasy "hobby"—belly dancing.

Belinda Bessant, a hospice worker in Las Vegas, had a total of 11 hours of surgery. Cindy Igle, a homemaker from San Diego, was most unhappy about her sagging breasts. After 14 procedures, she is now a D cup, and sports a new nose, to boot.

And Beth Lay, a customer-service supervisor, had liposuction done on her legs, a painful procedure that she endured because she was determined to turn her life around.

In the States, the Fox TV production held its finals last May 24, a genuine TV event that was viewed by more than 10 million people.

Striking

Its success has been so striking that its format has been imitated all over the world. In the Philippines, it's obviously inspired the "Born Diva" singing tilt on Channel 2.

What's the difference between "The Swan" and its emulators? Comparing "The Swan" with "Born Diva," we see that the second show's plus is the fact that it's factored singing talent into its equation.

On the other hand, its minus point is the fact that its makeovers aren't as extensive as the procedures on the original show.

"The Swan" takes three months and up to 16 procedures (nose jobs, breast enlargement, some dental work) and the time frame on "Born Diva" is obviously more circumscribed, hence the limited impact of its "makeovers."

Anita Baker opens up about music and family

By Rico P. Asilo

WE had mixed feelings when we were asked if we wanted to interview Anita Baker, the 46-year-old, eight-time Grammy winner, who breathed life and soul into timeless, elegant love songs like "Sweet Love," "Rapture" and "Just Because."

She's back with her long-awaited 10-track collection, "My Everything," which contains nine of her compositions, and a duet with Babyface ("Like You Used to Do").

Frequent spins

Truth to tell, she is one of our favorite R&B chanteuses, and her 1986 "Rapture" album still takes frequent spins in our CD player.

We didn't even notice that it's been 10 years since her last album, "Rhythm of Love," came out. Then, she took a self-imposed sabbatical from performing.

Of course, we were wary about the highly-revered diva's stern, tight-lipped reputation. But, we couldn't pass up the chance to chat with her.

When our mobile phone rang, we didn't know what to expect—but, boy, we were glad to be proven wrong. The Anita Baker we talked to was warm, affable and surprisingly honest. Sometime during our talk, we knew that we had struck a vulnerable nerve.

In 1993, she married Walter Bridgewater. Shortly thereafter, she announced that she was going to take a break from the music scene. Why the decade-long hiatus? Back then, her official answer was: "I needed to rest, to take care of my family."

But, when Anita opened up to BAKER. Warm, affable and surprisingly honest.

us, she confided that the '90s were the best and the worst of times for her: "It was pretty amazing—I got married and had kids. Then, we found out that my father had bone cancer, and my mom was afflicted with Alzheimer's disease. I couldn't write, I couldn't sing—I couldn't do anything creative! So, I decided to take a break."

Beautiful voices

Did she miss performing? "No. My hands were full. My children grounded me—I cooked breakfast at 7 a.m. everyday, my husband and I split the pack-ups, the boys' music lessons and PTA meetings."

Do her sons sing? "They have beautiful voices, but they don't realize it yet—they have perfect pitch! Eddie plays the piano, Walter the drums."

When we asked Anita about how different the new album is from the previous ones, she impressed us even more because, unlike many celebrities, she didn't come into the interview with an arsenal of ready-made, de-kahon answers. Other singers would have enumerated a million and one reasons, but she simply replied: "I'm afraid that it's just more of the same, beautiful love songs." And, we're not complaining!

How was it working with Babyface? "We met in Detroit, and we just clicked! We sat on the floor for more than an hour, and came up with three songs. It was amazing!"

If she were to choose artists she could record duets with, who would they be? She answered, "Anita Keys, India Arie, Rochelle Ferrell."

Favorite tracks in the new album? "I Can't Sleep at Night" and the ballad, "How Does It Feel?" I like the retro sound of "How Could You Love Me?"

She wrote "Men in My Life" for her husband and sons, although when we asked her what they thought of it, she laughed. "Oh, my kids just said, 'Mom, make me a sandwich!'"

Writer's perspective

Her favorite Anita Baker songs? "From a writer's perspective, it would have to be 'Fairy Tales.' But, I love singing 'You Bring Me Joy,' 'Sweet Love' and 'You're My Everything.'"

Baker added: "I'd love to visit Manila with my kids next year. Please tell my friends in the Philippines that they have my love, respect and admiration."

A few days after our chat with Anita, "My Everything" debuted at No. 4 at Billboard's Hot 200, an impressive feat on a pop chart littered with hip-hop and dance music.

Mowelfund boosts aid for film workers

By Nestor U. Torre

THIRTY years ago, we were asked by film industry leader Joseph Estrada to direct a big show at the Araneta Coliseum to raise funds to finance the social welfare activities of the new organization, the Movie Workers Welfare Foundation (Mowelfund).

That benefit concert was truly star-studded. Top movie luminaries performed for free to raise funds for the industry's "little" people, who have a chronically difficult time making both ends meet.

Financial woes

Since then, we have kept tabs on Mowelfund, and have been gratified to see that it's spent millions to help its more than 5,000 members alleviate their financial woes.

Some months ago, when we heard that Mowelfund's share of the proceeds of the Metro filmfest had been slashed, we wrote against the move, and we were happy when part of the cut was restored.

More recently, we again wrote about movie workers' need for hospitalization and housing, and we were pleasantly surprised when a housing executive expressed interest in helping Mowelfund out in this regard.

We linked her up with Mowelfund head Boots Anson-Roa, and we're happy to hear that Mowelfund will soon launch a low-cost housing program integrated with Creba Housing Foundation and Pag-ibig.

We realize, of course, that much more needs to be done for our movie workers and their families, who are now having an even harder time due to the movie industry's current slump.

That's why we were gratified to learn that Mowelfund is further improving its ability to generate additional income by renting out some of its facilities and outlets.

Movie mogul

Substantial help in this regard was recently forthcoming when movie mogul Ng Meng Tam donated equipment and facilities for a 34-seat mini-theater and preview room at the ground floor of Mowelfund's building on Rosario dr. in Cubao, QC.

Also completed was the Bulwagang Nepomuceno multi-purpose hall. The facilities were blessed last Sept. 24 at the Mowelfund Plaza, a signal event that was graced by the movie industry's top leaders.

The new facilities will be available at subsidized rates to film-related agencies and educational, civic and professional institutions.

These and other new initiatives will boost Mowelfund's ability to help its many needy members in terms of welfare, medical and burial assistance, education, livelihood and low-cost housing.

Beneficiaries

Boots Anson-Roa shares, "Mowelfund provides assistance, some repeatedly within the same year, to some 5,500 members for medicine and hospitalization. It counts around 900 death beneficiaries, and has extended institutional help to film-related agencies and 100 non-members via donations and services.

Livelihood program

"It has graduated several hundreds through its year-old livelihood program on reflexology, hair cutting, food making, and computer training in cooperation with BFI Foundation.

"In terms of low-cost housing, a pilot Mowelfund village is being planned in Monterey Hills, San Mateo, just off Marikina."

These are encouraging developments. We can all do our bit by supporting Mowelfund's activities and adding to its welfare funds by renting its facilities. Our movie workers need all the help they can get!

(Johnny Depp) is having a bad day. As if a collapsing marriage isn't enough (he catches his wife in bed with another man), he finds himself stalked by a spooky stranger (John Turturro), who accuses Mort of plagiarizing his story.

Koepp once again examines the dark recesses of the human mind in this relatively engaging thriller, based on Stephen King's

"Secret Window, Secret Garden."

Depp, Turturro and company create complex, nuanced characters, but the movie holds back on character development, and fails to cook up a convincing finale that could have made the viewing experience more involving.

As for us, we were spooked more by Turturro's ridiculously menacing, oversized hat!

Ecozone investments surge 90% to P30.4B

By Ronnel W. Domingo

INVESTMENTS in the various economic zones jumped 90 percent in the first nine months to P30.4 billion from P16 billion a year ago, the Philippine Economic Zone Authority reported yesterday.

For September alone, automotive-related projects made up the bulk of investments commitment amounting to P1.06 billion.

The Peza said projects approved last month were expected to generate a yearly average of $176 million in export receipts. The projects would also create some 1,800 jobs for directly hired workers.

The biggest investment approved last month in terms of project cost was Temic

Automotive (Philippines) Inc.'s P340.9-million facility for the manufacture of seat memory and car body electronics.

The German firm's project will be located at the Food Terminal Inc. ecozone and is expected to yield $45.4 million in receipts each year.

Another P330.7-million project, which the proponent asked to be kept confidential, was the second biggest project approved last month. It is expected to earn $80.8 million a year.

Ford Motor Co. Philippines Inc.'s P64.1-million revision of its existing project to include the assembly of knocked-down kits at the Greenfield Automotive Park ecozone was also approved by the Peza in September.

Ford Motor expects to earn $29.3 million a year from its exports to Vietnam and other Southeast Asian countries.

Philippine Nita Washing Technologies Inc. also got the Peza's nod for its P56.3-million project for the washing of textiles and garments at the Calamba Premiere International Park ecozone. The Japanese firm sees earnings of $1 million a year from its customers in Europe, the United States and Asia.

Juntec Corp.'s P49.7-million expansion of its manufacturing of meta-components for copiers, car audio and navigation equipment as well as related electronic parts at the Laguna International Industrial Park ecozone was also approved by the Peza last month.

The Japanese firm expects to generate $4.3 million in annual export receipts from its markets in the United States, Japan, China and Mexico.

The Peza also approved Philippine Techno Realty Inc.'s P45-million project to lease existing buildings to Peza-registered businesses at the First Cavite Industrial Estate ecozone.

Stocks near 54-month high

SHARES closed sharply higher yesterday, with the main index registering its best finish in nearly 54 months on a combination of technical factors and favorable fundamentals, traders said.

The 30-company Philippine Stock Exchange Index ended up 25.68 points, or 1.5 percent, at 1,787.25, its highest close since April 10, 2000, when it finished at 1,796.66. Gainers led decliners 57 to 18.

SMC's 8-month profit up 28% at P4.76B

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

FOOD and beverage giant San Miguel Corp. (SMC) expanded its net profit by 28 percent to P4.76 billion from January to August, boosted by higher beer volumes and lower costs for its soft drink group, the Coca-Cola Beverage Group.

Consolidated net earnings in the same period last year was P3.72 billion, the company said in its disclosure to the Philippine Stock Exchange.

Consolidated operating income rose 35 percent to P10.1 billion. Consolidated revenues climbed 12 percent to P107.9 billion as of August. Corporate volumes from January to August were also 6 percent higher.

Local beer sales volume for the eight-month period surged 16 percent from last year. Sales revenues from domestic beer operations were also up 20 percent to P23.4 billion. Operating profit also jumped 25 percent to P4.71 billion.

SMC said the benefits of improved distribution, right product portfolio and the influx of new drinkers in the market resulted in these gains.

For international beer operations, sales volume grew 13 percent for the first eight months. No figure was specified. Year-to-date sales revenues for international beer operations climbed 14 percent to $166.3 million from $145.3 million during the same period last year.

SMC had said it was spending close to P5 billion to expand its food facilities starting this year.

A new Purefoods Home meat plant in Cavite will be operating by the third quarter to process bacon and ham, among other processed meats.

In Batangas, a flour mill and a flour-blending facility have also been completed and commercial operations are expected to start soon.

The company's expansion and modernization program in the food sector is part of the larger program to invest an estimated P15 billion in the domestic market over the next three years.

while 42 stocks were unchanged. The index rose 1.1 percent on Thursday.

SM Prime was the most active stock, closing up 4.8 percent at P6.60. Before the market opened, the country's largest mall operator said it had raised $150 million via a syndicated term loan facility to be used for expansion. SM Prime said its first such facility was oversubscribed, indicating the company secured favorable terms.

PLDT rose 1.8 percent to P1,420 after the country's largest telecommunications group said yesterday its cellular subscriber base has exceeded 17 million.

PLDT rival Globe Telecom gained 2.8 percent to a record high P1,120 on expectations that its cellular subscriber base is also growing at a healthy pace, given PLDT's performance.

Early in the session, the market managed to push past the 1,763.30, the 53-month closing high set last Friday, and the rally persisted.

"The (positive) trend is still intact," said DA Market Securities President Nestor Aguilera. "In terms of fundamentals, all the negative news has been discounted by the market, including the high oil prices."

The market's upside was capped in past sessions by concerns over the impact high oil prices will have on the economy and corporate earnings. AP

BSP: Liquidity up by 6.1% to P1.72T

By Doris C. Dumlaog

PUBLIC sector borrowings continued to fuel the expansion in the country's net domestic credits, contributing to the growth of domestic liquidity.

The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas yesterday reported that domestic liquidity, or m3, grew by 6.1 percent year-on-year to P1.72 trillion as of end-August 2004, mainly due to the rise in the BSP's net foreign assets (NFA) and an improvement in net domestic credits.

"The growth in domestic credits was due mainly to increased credits to the public sector, which rose by 14.6 percent, as banks continued to purchase government securities," the BSP reported.

The public sector includes the national government as well as government-owned and -controlled corporations.

Credits to the private sector likewise grew stronger by 4.6 percent from the previous month's 4 percent rise.

The NFA of the monetary system rose by 9.3 percent in August due mainly to revaluation adjustments in the BSP's foreign currency-denominated assets as a result of the weaker peso.

The m3 growth in August, however, was a deceleration from the 6.7 percent increase of the previous month.

In seasonally adjusted terms, m3 grew by 0.1 percent month-on-month in August, slightly lower than the 0.9 percent monthly increase posted in July this year.

"The moderate though steady growth in domestic liquidity has been accompanied by improvements in domestic demand," the BSP said.

It cited, for instance, that average capacity utilization in July increased 79.7 percent as a percentage of total capacity in the manufacturing sector, up from the 78.7 percent utilization rate in July last year.

"Both exports and imports reflected improvements during the year, growing year-on-year by 3.2 percent and 5.6 percent, respectively, in July 2004 from the contraction in exports of 5.5 percent and slight 1.4 percent growth in imports in July 2003," the BSP said.

It added that employment data also improved during the third quarter, with the unemployment rate dropping to 11.7 percent from 12.6 percent during the same period of the previous year.

"In the months ahead, monetary authorities will continue to monitor developments in the real and monetary sectors to ensure that liquidity conditions remain consistent with price stability objective," the BSP said.

PSALM sells 4th Napocor genco for $0.41M

By Abigail L. Ho

THE POWER Sector Assets and Liabilities Management Corp. (PSALM) last Thursday sold for $410,410 the 400-kilowatt Cawayan hydroelectric plant in Bicol—one of 35 National Power Corp. generation plants on the auction block.

Sorsogon II Electric Cooperative (Soreco II) beat two other bidders for the plant—Chervin Enterprises and lawyer Ramon Constanicio.

The first scheduled bidding for the Cawayan plant was declared a failure when all bids fell short of the government's floor price. Soreco II was also part of the roster of bidders for the asset during the first round of bidding.

"This successful bid should signal that government is pushing forward with its privatization program, even as it is looking for the best short- and long-term solutions to the energy and fiscal situation," said Vincent Perez, energy secretary and concurrent privatization, bids and awards committee head.

The Cawayan plant was the fourth Napocor generation asset PSALM was able to sell since the Joint Congressional Power Commission approved the genco groupings and the privatization schedule in December last year.

The three other plants the state firm had sold were hydroelectric in nature: the 3.5-megawatt (MW) Talomo plant in Davao, the 1.6-MW Agusan plant in Bukidnon and the 1.8-MW Barit plant in Camarines Sur.

The Abotizes Hydroelectric Development Corp. bagged the Talomo plant for $1.37 million in March, while the Lopez's First Generation Holdings Inc. won the auction for the Agusan plant in June with a bid of $1.5 million.

Ramon Constanicio posted the highest bid for the Barit plant at $480,000.

The 1.2 MW Loboc hydroelectric plant in Bohol is next to be auctioned off on Oct. 27.

GMA 7 to launch own cable channel in US

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

GMA NETWORK Inc. in January is set to launch its own cable channel in the United States, according to network sources.

The television giant would offer Filipinos living on the US West Coast cable subscriptions to GMA 7 programs such as soap operas and entertainment shows.

But the plans have yet to be firmed up, sources said. If things were to go as planned, this would be the first time GMA 7 would hit foreign shores.

GMA recorded a net profit of P885 million in the first seven months of the year, up 25 percent from P707 million a year ago. This brings it nearer to its P1.5-billion goal for this year.

The company's revenue grew 17 percent to P4.3 billion from January to July. But operating expenses also increased by 20 percent to about P2 billion from P1.7 billion a year ago.

Felipe Gozon, GMA president, had said the company would push through with its initial public offering in the first quarter of 2005.

Gozon said the company would be naming an underwriter during the third quarter.

The company is planning to sell 30 percent of its shares to the public to raise as much as P9 billion.

A FUN JOURNEY BACK TO STELLA MARRIS COLLEGE

It's been too long but the '70s still command a strong reason to cheer and reunite for those wild times. This is exactly what the alumnae (some members of which are shown above) of Stella Marris College will do in their grand Silver Jubilee homecoming today, October 2, at the school grounds. The affair will come with all night retro dancing, 70s exhibit, fashion show, and performances by show bands. All Stellans are invited to attend the event. For details call 6715334, c/o Sophie de los Santos or Judith Arenas.

EARNING PUBLIC GOODWILL

Firms to build model mining townsBy Vincent Cabrera
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

BAGUIO CITY—Companies are coming together to build modern mining communities, ones that would hopefully redeem the mistakes of the past.

This according to the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, which linked up with the Chamber of Mines to draw up detailed social and fiscal schemes for future mining towns.

But these will not be the usual mining towns, according to PCCI president Noemi Saludo.

Learning from the fate of the country's older mining communities, PCCI will provide future mine towns a working economy that would allow these to survive the entry and exit of huge mining operations.

Public hostility

Benjamin Philip Romualdez, Chamber of Mines president, said public hostility to the mining industry could be traced back to the sins of the original mines.

Although mining firms invested highly in the development of most mining towns, host communities and provinces rarely felt them because the national government absorbed most of these through taxes that were rarely plowed back to the provinces, Romualdez said.

A PCCI case study also revealed that various mining communities have ended up relying completely on these mining companies, Saludo said.

"Once the mines closed, the firms got the blame for the deterioration of their former host towns," she said.

The prevailing hostility compelled the government to freeze mine development projects that could be viable within the next two years, Romualdez said.

He said the Arroyo administration would need the projects' P2-billion capital now lying idle.

Saludo said the country's largest business organizations wanted to reduce this hostility by shouldering the cost of training and expanding small and medium scale enterprises in towns targeted for mining development.

MINING firms have invested billions of pesos in social projects, such as reforestation.

"Communities that get excise taxes from the mines, or a share from their national taxes, must now be trained to use this for high-value opportunities," Romualdez said.

He said the PCCI and the mining sector would help secure funding for small and medium enterprises in these towns.

Good faith

Saludo said this would guarantee "good faith" for business.

That had always been in short supply since the American colonial government helped install American overseers over local mining projects, said the militant Cordillera Peoples Alliance, a mining industry critic in Northern Luzon.

Joan Carling, CPA chair, said environmental activists must be allowed to study these modern mining towns because the government's deficit has compelled local governments to seek alternative economic sources.

"To them, even to officials who are environmental stalwarts, the mines are becoming very attractive because they need revenues to offset the possible loss of their internal revenue allotments," Carling said.

Romualdez, who is also president of Benguet Corp., the country's oldest mining company, said the industry might confront renewed militancy due to deficit pressures, which would reduce infrastructure spending.

But he said the industry could not ignore its history lessons, which detail how inept government bureaucracy ended up trivializing all of the mining firms' contribution to local development since 1903.

Mining contributions

Irogon town in Benguet, which hosted Benguet Corp. for 101 years and Philex Mining Corp. for 46 years, now ranks among the country's first class towns, but the province remained part of the 20 poorest provinces until 2003, according to the National Statistical Coordination Board (NSCB).

At its peak between 1977 and 1996, Benguet had contributed P25 billion in taxes, duties and community expenditures, based on data supplied by the firm for the government's National Minerals Policy.

The firm's annual average expenditures reach P962.2 million, Benguet documents showed.

Redempta Bahada, Philex vice president and environment manager, placed her company's investments at P8.9 billion since 1958.

Philex' 2003 annual report notes that the firm was taxed P144 million, when it earned $59 million in exports.

Mankayan town, also in Benguet, retains its fourth class ranking despite the presence of the 66-year-old Lepanto Consolidated Mining Co. (LCMC), which has contributed P3.307 billion in taxes since 1947, based on corporate tax records.

Had taxes been paid directly to host towns, Romualdez said the industry's public image could have been better.

This "love-hate relationship" now dictates the future of the oldest Philippine mines.

Future relationship

Tuba Councilor Val Carantes said most town officials continue to block Philex's exploration and expansion program in their town until it pays a P3-million environmental fine.

Philex is winding up its Benguet operations.

LCMC is also encountering difficulties in expanding its Teresa ore property due to the complaints from Mankayan villagers.

There can be no debate about the mines' historical role at building most of the local towns in Benguet, said Romualdez.

He said Benguet Corp. helped finance the construction of schools in the early 1900s when American missionaries began introducing English, Science and Mathematics to the indigenous Filipinos in the Cordillera.

"But the mines were affected by the system. When the government decided to absorb all of the taxes in the 1970s, we started to lose our standing in parts of the community where government's presence was not being felt," he said.

The country's older mines responded by increasing their contributions to local programs.

Social investments

The Mines and Geosciences Bureau pegged the overall social investments of Benguet, Philex and LCMC at P68.77 billion.

These investments include the firms' expenses for raising and sustaining watershed forest areas to protect towns against the mining operations.

But its net effect was far from satisfactory, Romualdez said.

A mining official from another firm pointed out that they spent a third of their investments building roads and bridges for a local government that refused to part with its purse.

Europeans urge opening of Naia 3

By Ronnel W. Domingo

THE $657-MILLION Ninoy Aquino International Airport Terminal 3 can start operation within six months, that is, if government will allow it, according to the European Chamber of Commerce of the Philippines.

EGGP executive vice president Henry J. Schumacher said in an interview that it would take three months to prepare the facility and another three months to train people to operate it.

Schumacher said project contractor Takenaka Corp. of Japan had invited businessmen and airline executives in the past few weeks to tour the facility and see for themselves that it was in top shape.

Schumacher said that with the deterioration of Naia Terminal 1, the need for Terminal 3 was obvious.

Schumacher, a German, said most companies from his country that are already doing business here have plans of expansion due to growing markets.

Some of these firms are engaged in electronics, chemicals, garments, health care and industrial services.

He said a legal resolution of the Terminal 3 issue would be a positive signal to European firms that investing in the Philippines would be a good step to take.

The Airport Terminal 3 has been the subject of litigation since the Supreme Court ruled in May 2003 that all five contracts related to the Naia project were void. The high tribunal said the contracts were against public policy and violative of the Build-Operate-Transfer law.

The high court also decided that the government should take over the project.

Because of this, Fraport AG—the German airport operator contracted for the Terminal 3 concession—reportedly wrote off some $312 million it invested in the project.

Also, Fraport had sought arbitration with the International Center for Settlement of Investment Disputes. The company had accused the government of various "unlawful acts," including its failure to pay compensation for the expropriation of the airport terminal.

"If the (Philippine) government decides that the Terminal 3 issue, issue must be solved legally, then it would have to appoint a political negotiator to help find a solution," Schumacher said. "Surely there are solutions."

Oil firms scramble for FCDUs to meet rising import bills

By Doris C. Dumlaog

OIL COMPANIES scrambled for more foreign currency deposit unit (FCDU) loans in the second quarter of this year to meet rising import bills amid skyrocketing global crude prices.

But in availing of the FCDU loans, the oil firms, who earned mostly in pesos, had exposed themselves to greater foreign exchange risks, underscoring the need for them to hedge, analysts said.

Oil companies had obtained $511 million from Philippine banks' FCDU system in the second quarter of the year, more than double the first quarter avancement of $243 million, the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas reported yesterday.

The report noted that the availments made oil companies the biggest beneficiaries of fresh FCDU loan releases in the second quarter, accounting for 42 percent of total disbursements.

The doubling of FCDU loan availments by oil firms during the period came with the surge in the country's oil import bill due to rising oil prices in the world market.

A foreign exchange trader estimated that the monthly dollar requirement for oil importation was now about $400 million from only $250 million a year ago.

As global oil prices hugged the $50 per barrel level, analysts are worried about the dire consequences on Asian economies that do not have large domestic oil supplies but whose industries are heavy energy users.

"Their import bill is rising and the peso is depreciating, so I would think these oil companies are hedging," said Astro del Castillo, managing director and fund manager of First Grade Holdings.

Del Castillo said hedging against volatility in crude prices could be done either through certain financial instruments or with the way they purchase the crude oil, as the companies could resort to forward contracts with offshore suppliers to peg the price of their future purchases.

To facilitate hedging against foreign exchange risks, the BSP has an existing currency risk protection program (CRPP) facility, a non-deliverable forward contract between itself and the commercial bank with the foreign exchange obligations of bank clients as the underlying transaction. The facility aims to relieve the pressure on the spot market created by market players wanting to frontload their future foreign currency requirements and by borrowers such as oil firms wanting to cover foreign currency obligations.

Meanwhile, the BSP report noted that new FCDU loan releases amounted to $1.21 billion during the April-June period, almost twice the $607 million disbursements in the first quarter.

About 57 percent of these disbursements came from local commercial banks and the balance from foreign bank branches/subsidiaries operating in the country," the BSP said.

This brought the total outstanding FCDU loans granted by commercial banks and thrift banks in the country to $4.8 billion as of end-June, up by $150 million or 3 percent from the first quarter, but down by 2 percent from a year ago.

Resident borrowers continued to account for 98 percent of the outstanding FCDU loan portfolio, with public utility firms and commodity/service exports each having a 21 percent share.

Private borrowers continued to account for almost two-thirds of the outstanding credits.

In terms of maturity, medium and long-term loans (MLT)—or those with payment terms of one year and above—comprised 71 percent of total. MLT credits comprised 55 percent and 98 percent of the total private and public sector credits, respectively.

Unionbank raises $125M through bond float

THE ABONITZ group's banking arm Union Bank of the Philippines raised $125 million from its three-year global bond offering.

This was the first time the bank tapped the offshore capital market since the 1997 currency turmoil.

In a press briefing yesterday, Unionbank president Victor Valdepenas said the bid was much higher than the target size, but the bank decided to cap the issuance at $125 million.

"That week, the ROP (Republic of the Philippines) also went to the market with a $1 billion offering," Valdepenas said.

Unionbank's bonds were priced at 99.669 percent or 445 basis points over the comparative US Treasuries with a 7.25 percent coupon rate. Credit Suisse, First Boston and UBS Investment Bank acted as joint arranger and bookrunner for the issuance.

Valdepenas said the proceeds from the offering were made available to the bank last Friday.

The proceeds shall be used to upgrade the bank's IT (information technology) infrastructure and boost its lending through credit cards as well as to small and medium enterprises, the bank chief said.

Valdepenas said Unionbank planned to roll out a much better IT platform with customized electronic banking facilities for specific customers. He expected the bank to spend P100 million each year over the next five years for the IT project.

Also, bank officials are planning to expand their credit card business, which now has a customer base of 160,000, Valdepenas said.

"Our credit card base grows by 4,000 to 7,000 a month," he said. "Three years ago our subscribers were less than 20,000."

Valdepenas said the bank also planned to grow its SME lending portfolio to P1 billion this year.

The bank has so far devoted P750 million of its portfolio to this sector.

Aside from the Philippine government, Unionbank was the first Philippine entity that braved the global bond market after Macanang announced that the country was in the midst of a fiscal crisis.

International credit rating firm Moody's Investors Service assigned a Ba2 rating to the bank's senior or unsecured debt issue. This rating indicates substantial credit risk, particularly as a result of adverse economic change over time. But business or financial alternatives may be available to allow financial commitments to be met.

Established in 1982 as a result of a merger between Union Savings and Mortgage Bank, and Bancam Development Corp., Union Bank is currently the 13th largest indigenous bank in the Philippines.

The bank reported consolidated assets of P76.7 billion ($1.4 billion) as of June 30, 2004.

Expert calls for more studies on COCO oil's anti-AIDS benefits

By Jerry E. Espinada

THE 1999 LOCAL study that showed virgin coconut oil (VCO) could reduce, if not totally wipe out, the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) needs a follow-up study to validate its results.

Dr. Conrado Dayrit, the man behind what is now called the "miracle oil," says the 1999 study was "just the beginning of an exhaustive work." He says the follow-up study should involve at least 200 HIV-positive patients, if possible up to 300 patients.

Dayrit is looking for young researchers to do the study because at 85, he says, he is already "too old" to take part in it.

14 HIV-positive patients

The initial study had involved 14 HIV-positive patients of the San Lazaro Hospital in Sta. Cruz, Manila. The research took six months and was conducted by Dayrit's group and medical staff of the state-run facility.

The study showed that the coconut chemical lauric acid could inhibit, delay and reduce the spread of HIV.

Dayrit says the viral loads of research subjects went down, while their CD4 cells—the human body's first lines of defense against infection—went up.

He presented his group's findings during the 37th Cocotech meeting in Chennai, India in 2000.

Similar presentations followed here and abroad, and his findings have become a fixture in many VCO websites.

More concrete conclusions

The P5-million research was funded by the nongovernment Philippine Coconut Research and Development Foundation (PCPDF) where Dayrit was then a trustee.

PCPDF technical supervisor Romulo Conde had described the test results as "promising," but was also quoted as having cautioned for a need for "more concrete conclusions...to satisfy the world scientific community."

Dr. Roderick Poblete, head of the Philippine National AIDS Council (PNAC) secretariat, shares Conde's views.

PNAC is the lead agency in the country's fight against the killer disease.

Poblete says a study with a much bigger scope would "erase any doubts on the results of the initial tests."

Dayrit says VCO has become very popular among HIV-positive locals.

In the absence of a cure for HIV/AIDS, he says, "many patients have resorted to alternative medicines like coconut oil. Apparently dissatisfied with what their doctors had been giving them, they gave coconut oil a try."

The Philippine HIV/AIDS Research Agenda, a joint report of the National Economic Development Authority and the United Nations Development

Program, noted that VCO was "developed using sound scientific research methods."

"VCO is not only affordable and readily available but also culturally acceptable," the report said.

'Better late than never'

Dayrit's obsession with coconut oil seems to be paying off. For one, he is getting a lot of attention from the local medical community.

"More doctors are acknowledging VCO's antiviral effects as well as its many other health benefits," says Dayrit.

"Better late than never," he says, sounding really happy.

Nowadays, he receives many invitations to speak in hospitals.

Dayrit did his first lecture on VCO in 1983, 40 years after he started teaching pharmacology at the University of the Philippines College of Medicine.

Wanted: funds

Dayrit says the expanded study on the antiretroviral properties of VCO would cost several millions more compared to the initial one. And getting funding is the biggest obstacle they have to hurdle.

Dayrit says that while his son, Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit, is "fully behind me and my cause, his hands are tied."

He says the DOH, with its annual budget of P92.8 billion, has limited funds which have been earmarked for

DR. Conrado Dayrit wants to prove that virgin coconut oil really does have beneficial effects on HIV-positive patients.

various health programs, and not a single centavo of this was allocated for research.

Neither could the Department of Science and Technology, with a budget of P2.21 billion, bankroll his proposed project, Dayrit says.

The DOST-attached National Academy of Science and Technology, which Dayrit headed for nine consecutive years, is not a funding agency. He says its budget of P16 million a year is used mainly to cover honorariums of national scientists and academicians.

A DOH official had suggested tapping the controversial coconut levy fund, estimated at P140 billion.

Dayrit is thinking if cash cows like the Philippine Amusement and Gaming Corp. (Pagcor) and the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office (PCSO) could provide the funds.

ways to make poppy plants nonaddictive.

Five years ago, researchers at the Central Institute of Medicinal and Aromatic Plants (Cimnap) in India announced they had altered the genes of certain poppy seeds so the plants would retain their nutritional properties but not the narcotic effects of the drugs produced from them. The work appeared in the October 1999 issue of the journal Plant Breeding.

Cimnap also planned to alter another variety of poppies to produce plants that retain their medicinal properties but not their addictive effects. There is no word yet on the progress of their efforts.

One of the places where poppies are legally grown is Tasmania, which supplies nearly half of the world's needs.

Tasmanian Alkaloids is an Australian company that works with poppy farmers in the area. In the late 1990s, researchers at the company began testing a new variety of poppy which did not make heroin, codeine or morphine. Instead, these poppies only produced the chemical precursors to those addictive drugs—the compounds thebaine and oripavine, which are what pharmaceutical companies use to develop painkillers.

Norman

In the Sept. 23 issue of the journal Nature, researchers led by Philip Larkin of the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organization (CSIRO) describe a new poppy variety they named top1, or "thebaine oripavine poppy 1."

Australian poppy farmers call it Norman, which is short for "no morphine."

The researchers said the top1 poppy was nonaddictive, or as they wrote in their paper, "a crop that carried little risk of diversion for illicit purposes."

By slightly altering the DNA of the poppy plant, the biochemical pathways that lead to the production of morphine and codeine (heroin is a derivative of codeine) are blocked after thebaine and oripavine are synthesized.

As pharmaceutical companies have long had to convert the morphine back to thebaine for their purposes, it is clear why this poppy variety would benefit everyone.

High yield

In an interview with Reuters, Larkin said the new poppy variety could produce thebaine and oripavine at a very high yield. These two alkaloids are preferred starting points for the subsequent manufacture of a new generation of powerful analgesics.

He said they were using this knowledge to produce other designer changes in poppies "to serve human pharmaceutical needs better."

Larkin et al.'s long-term goal, to develop a poppy variety that produces solely thebaine.

Larkin and his colleagues have not yet identified the genes associated with the top1 mutation. During their studies, they noted that 10 genes were underexpressed in the top1 plants as opposed to the wild poppy variety.

The opium dens in London that Sherlock Holmes knew are no longer there, but there are many cocaine and heroin addicts with us today. Will the next century find us in a world where addictions to these drugs are a thing of the past?

Holmes used to say that he couldn't formulate a theory without data, in short, time will tell.

E-mail the author at massie@massie.com.

IN LAURIE King's "A Monstrous Regiment of Women," Mary Russell is kidnapped and constantly injected with heroin until she craves for the drug. When she is rescued from captivity by Sherlock Holmes several days later, he is surprised how quickly she has become addicted to the drug. She explains that while in the hospital several years earlier, she was given heroin as a painkiller because her doctors believed that, unlike opium, the drug was nonaddictive.

Heroin and morphine are addictive painkillers that men have been deriving from the poppy plant in the past two centuries, although opium was extracted from poppies much earlier. Today, poppies are legally grown only in certain parts of the world to meet the needs of pharmaceutical companies for these opiates, or painkillers.

As Laurie King shows in her novel (and no, I won't give away the ending), long-term use of opiates alters the neurons in the brain so that addicts crave the pleasurable rush the drug brings and feel ill if they don't get their regular dosage.

Altering plant genes

To prevent further misuse of opiates, researchers have long been working on

Young Filipino mathematicians win in international contests

LAST July, the first batch of Mathematics Trainers Guild (MTG) delegates went to Hong Kong for the 8th Po Leung Kok Primary Math World Competition (PMWC), pitting their skills against 40 teams from all over the world.

In the individual competition, Paul Julian Hao (Chuang Kai Shek College) and John Bernard Ong (Grace Christian High School) took second honors, while Carlo Francisco Arias (Southridge School) and Stephanie Anne Oliveros (De La Salle Zobel) took third honors.

In the team competition, Team Luzon and Team Visayas received merit awards. Members of Team Luzon were Ezra Joy Templonuevo (Jesus Is Lord Colleges Foundation in Bulacan), Angeline Banqued (St. Paul's College in Pasig), Gilian Uy (Grace Christian High School) and Jillian Kristel Sy (St. Stephen's High School). Team Visayas was composed of John Bernard Ong, Jose Enrico Lecera, Tobit Narciso and Vance Uy (the last two from St. Jude Catholic School).

Incidentally, Lecera took home a gold medal from the Asia Pacific Primary Math Competition in Singapore last May, and Vance Uy did the same two years ago.

Exceeding expectations

Last month, a second delegation came back from the 2nd Elementary Math Inter-city

Competition (Emic) in Lucknow, India, with two golds, seven silvers and 13 bronzes in the individual competition, and four silvers and two bronzes in the team contest.

According to Carlo Brian Nerecena, a former participant and now coach, "their performance exceeded expectations, and was a dramatic improvement over what was already considered a surprising performance last year in Thailand."

The competition had 36 teams and 144 participants from 10 countries: Bulgaria, Indonesia, Iran, Taiwan, Thailand, Pakistan, South Africa, Vietnam, India and the Philippines.

The best news is that the 2005 Emic will be held here in the Philippines, the second time we will play host to an international math fest. In 2001, Tagaytay played host to the contest.

Training young talents

The MTG, founded by Simon Chua, is an organization of dedicated educators who train our talented youth for international competition. Since 1996 it has been sending delegations to elementary and high school competitions abroad, mostly in the Asia-Pacific region.

In competitions such as the PMWC, around half of the competitors would be receiving honors, with first, second, and third honors divided into a ratio close to 1:2:3.

EUREKA!

Queen N. Lee-Chua

Most of the time, the Philippine team manages to win 2nd and 3rd honors

Most of the time, the Philippine team manages to come home with second and third honors. Only twice did a Filipino receive first honors: Nerecena (Areneo Grade School, now in the Areneo de Manila University) in 1998 and Kristina Lam (then of St. Joseph's Academy of Iloilo) in 1999.

So far, Kristina is the only Filipino to achieve a perfect score in the individual competition, and I am proud to say she is now studying at the Alieneo.

What contest is like

In the PMWC, 15 problems are given in the individual problem-solving contest. Awards are based on percentiles and on the difficulty of the questions.

According to Nerecena, this year's contest was "pretty hard."

"A score as low as 8 out of 15 already merited third honors, whereas last year the cutoff for third honors was 13. This year, 13 was enough for first honors and 11 for second."

In the team competition, eight questions are divided among four members, and they must solve the problem in 49 minutes. Two more questions are given to each group afterward.

The teams are divided into divisions with scores compared among them. Awards go to the top three teams, and merit awards to the next two in each division.

After surveying our performance this year, Nerecena reflects that "other countries have developed similar nationwide training programs just like the MTG, and they are slowly gaining on us, if they have not already overtaken us. This goes for countries like Indonesia and Thailand whom we were fond of beating some years back. All these make for a higher level of competition and I just hope we can keep up."

Next week we feature questions from the 2004 PMWC and the 2003 Thailand Emic.

ANSWERS to last week's quiz: 1-b (or f), 2-f (or b), 3-e (or j), 4-a, 5-h, 6-c, 7-i, 8-d, 9-a (or i)

Winner: Erika Marie Isidro

You can claim your prize at the Marketing Dept., PDI Building, Chino Rocas Ave. cor Yague and Mascardo Sts., Makati City and look for Ms. Chris Vido (Monday-Friday, 9 a.m.-4 p.m.).

Bird flu could trigger next pandemic

By Rafael R. Castillo, MD

THE BIRD flu virus is back and it may have mutated into a more vicious type of bug with a different mode of transmission. Asian health authorities are on alert after a Thai mother and her 11-year-old daughter, as well as a 13-year-old boy from another family, all died of bird flu-like symptoms recently. The aunt who took care of the girl was also treated for severe atypical pneumonia.

The virus has so far killed 30 people this year and more than 100 million chickens and birds died or were culled.

If the lethal H5N1 strain of the bird flu virus mutates into a highly contagious form, World Health Organization officials fear this could trigger the next pandemic. A mutated bird flu outbreak was blamed for the deaths of 40 million people worldwide in 1918.

Human transmission

What makes these recent reports alarming is the fact that the virus might have been transmitted between humans. The mother and the girl's aunt might have contracted bird flu directly from the girl who might have gotten it from their infected chickens.

Thai officials, however, sought to downplay the public's fears, saying that initial tests on the aunt showed no evidence of the bird flu virus. On Tuesday, they said evidence indicated that the lethal H5N1 strain had not changed and that human-to-human transmission, if at all, had been limited to one family and a single village in northern Thailand.

Laboratory tests are currently being done on samples from the victims and these are expected to be completed any time now. We hope Thai health officials would be transparent about the findings so other countries could take the necessary precautions. We hate to have a replay of the SARS epidemic which was allegedly kept under wraps by Chinese health officials until it exploded into an uncontrollable epidemic.

MEDICAL FILES

Mutating viruses

What causes a virus to mutate? Viruses usually contain protein blocks (amino acids) and any change in these can drastically change the virus' structure, which can make them resistant to conventional drugs and can alter their modes of transmission.

The inappropriate use of some medications can trigger adaptation processes in some viruses that can subsequently convert them into monster bugs.

Since what we have is still predominantly a bird-to-man transmission, everyone should be advised on how to prevent its spread from its main source. Chicken or bird droppings are still the main culprit, so chicken growers and those with pet birds must make sure that these are properly disposed of. Using disinfectants in chicken or bird cages have also been suggested to help minimize the spread of the infection.

There is still no vaccine or therapy for the bird flu. Human victims have to rely on their own immune system to fight off the infection until it subsides by itself.

Zero infection

Dr. Yeoh Eng-kiong, Hong Kong Secretary for Health, Welfare and Food, proposes two major strategic approaches to achieve and sustain "zero infection and transmission" by minimizing human contact with live poultry.

Cold-chain approach. All live poultry is slaughtered and undergoes a chilling process in a slaughterhouse. Retail outlets would only be allowed to sell poultry chilled at a temperature between 0 and 4 degrees Celsius.

Freshly slaughtered chicken approach. All live poultry is slaughtered and dressed at regional slaughtering hubs where consumers buy them immediately so they do not have to undergo a chilling process.

Other preventive measures include:

- Removing poultry farms from populated areas.
- Reducing the number of live chickens in each poultry stall in the market.
- Redesigning the poultry stall layout to provide segregation between customers and live poultry.
- Increasing the number of market rest days for thorough cleaning and disinfection.
- Enforcing strict precautions in the conveyance of live poultry.

Bird flu fast facts

THE H5N1 strain of the bird flu virus has killed 20 Vietnamese and 10 Thais this year, while millions of birds have been culled. The virus has also been found in pigs, fueling fears it could mix with human viruses and mutate, leading to a pandemic.

Following are some facts from the World Health Organization and the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention:

- Avian influenza is an infectious disease of birds caused by type A strains of the influenza virus. It was first identified in Italy more than 100 years ago and now occurs worldwide.
- Migratory waterfowl, particularly wild ducks, are the natural reservoir of avian influenza viruses. These birds are also the most resistant to infection. Domestic poultry, including chickens and turkeys, are particularly susceptible to epidemics.
- The virus does not typically infect humans. But in 1997 an outbreak of the H5N1 strain among poultry in Hong Kong caused severe respiratory illness in 18 people, of whom six died. It was the first instance of direct bird-to-human transmission of bird flu.

• Of the 15 bird flu subtypes, H5N1 is of great concern because it mutates rapidly and has a propensity to acquire genes from viruses infecting other animal species. If more humans become infected with H5N1, and if more mixing occurs between human and avian flu viruses, then there would be a greater chance that a new subtype would emerge that could cause a pandemic.

• Birds which survive infection excrete the virus for at least 10 days, orally and in feces, greatly increasing its spread in live poultry markets and by migratory birds.

• For the highly infectious types, studies have shown that a single gram of contaminated manure can contain enough virus to infect one million birds.

A TOTAL of 183 surgeons nationwide participated in the first-ever virtual OR in the country.

INSIDE a conference room at the Philippine General Hospital, close to two dozen doctors gather to watch a video of a surgical procedure performed by a colleague months before. They comment on the operation and ask their colleague to explain his techniques. But what could have been an ordinary medical conference is made exceptional by the fact that the group is joined by other doctors from various parts of the country, live via Webcast.

Webcasting is the use of the World Wide Web to broadcast information, including audio and video feeds.

Last Sept. 21, the first virtual operating room was held at the PGH. A total of 183 surgeons nationwide participated. The doctors discussed a parotidectomy performed last May by Dr. Arturo de la Peña, a consultant at the UP-PGH Division of Surgical Oncology/Head and Neck Surgery.

(A parotidectomy is the surgical removal of the parotid gland, a salivary gland in front of and below the ear.)

Said Dela Peña: "Virtual OR opens up a lot of possibilities. One of them is that we can bring together leading surgeons from around the country to voice their views on exceptional surgical cases while at the same time allowing those stationed in remote locations to listen and interact."

Much time, money

Before the advent of Webcasting, Dela Peña said, doctors had to go to the actual operating room to watch a surgical procedure or to watch a video tape of that procedure or to acquire a surgical atlas. That required a great deal of time and money.

Virtual OR, on the other hand, provides audio-visual interactivity without much cost, the doctor said.

During the country's first virtual OR, the UP-PGH was hooked up with the University of Santo Tomas University Hospital, Makati Medical Center, Philippine Heart Center, University of the East Ramon R. Magsaysay Hospital, Batangas Medical Society, Vicente Sotto Memorial Medical Center (in Cebu) and Davao Doctors Hospital.

Resource provider

The pharmaceutical firm Merck Sharp and Dohme Philippines provided the resources for the virtual OR. It had previously set up resource centers within the hospitals, providing medical practitioners with a wide range of literature, multimedia services and conference facilities.

"Since we have Webcasting capability in these centers, we decided to take [things] to the next level [and] provided opportunities for doctors around the country to interact live online on interesting and provocative medical cases," said MSD corporate affairs director Christine Liwanag.

"The exceptional aspect of this [Webcast] is that it only requires minimal computer technology. The virtual OR was completed without any need for satellite down-linkage—the downloading of software or hardware materials or any other high technology applications—which was a must before," said Liwanag.

Virtual ORs will now form part of MSD resource center's offerings.

Balancing efficacy, safety of arthritis drugs

THERE was much excitement in the late 1990s over a new class of arthritis drugs, known as the highly selective COX-2 inhibitors. The drugs were considered a superior option, promising to effectively relieve pain in conditions such as arthritis without the side effects caused by traditional medications.

Both traditional and newer drugs work by suppressing some chemicals in the body (known as COX-2) that cause pain and inflammation.

Traditional medications, however, prevent another group of chemicals (known as COX-1) from maintaining a healthy stomach. Thus, side effects such as ulcer and stomach bleeding become common complaints.

In contrast, less of these side effects are experienced with the newer drugs as they selectively target COX-2, without affecting COX-1. But the fanfare over these drugs did not last long as concerns on their cardiovascular safety mounted.

Growing evidence

In a symposium held last June in Dubai, Dr. Daniel E. Furst, the Carl M. Pearson professor of rheumatology at the University of California (LA) in the United States, showed there was growing evidence of a relationship between increasing COX-2 selectivity and the risk of cardiovascular adverse effects or heart attacks.

Furst cited a voluntary adverse event reporting system set up by the Canadian Health Authority which showed reports of increased risk of heart attack and cardiovascular events with highly selective COX-2 drugs. In contrast, meloxicam, a drug with just enough COX-2 and COX-1 inhibition to reduce pain in arthritis and at the same time produce less gastrointestinal side effects, had no reports of increased heart attacks.

Doubt on safety

More recently, findings from a Food and Drug Administration (FDA) study presented during an epidemiological and drug safety meeting in France linked a highly selective COX-2 inhibitor to an increased risk of heart attack and sudden cardiac death.

With these revelations, Furst recommended that when considering the most appropriate anti-inflammatory medication for patients, physicians should consider striking a balance between efficacy and safety.

RP gains in Popdev, reproductive health

By A. Ma. Guerrero Contributor

FOR THE PHILIPPINES, here are some scenarios devoutly to be wished by 2015:

- Universal access to reproductive health services
 - Reduction of illiteracy in women and girls
 - An enrollment ratio of at least 90 percent for primary schoolchildren (Grades 1-4)
 - Seventy-five percent reduction in maternal deaths
 - Reduction of infant deaths by at least 40 percent of all births assisted by skilled attendants
- And by next year, to have sixty percent of primary health care and family planning facilities offer a wide range of safe and effective family planning methods, essential obstetric care, and reproductive tract infection (RTI) prevention and management.

These are just some of the goals of the groundbreaking International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD), held in Cairo in September 1994, and since then commemorated every five years. The Philippines is a signatory to the 20-year ICPD program of action, which promotes poverty alleviation and human rights. The goals center around population and development and reproductive health.

This year is the ICPD's 10th anniversary, and it will be observed during the United Nations General Assembly in

New York on Oct. 14. In connection with the anniversary, the Philippines will hold its "ICPD at 10" national conference at the Heritage Hotel, Pasay City, on Oct. 4-6.

"The ICPD stands at midpoint, it is now 10 years old, and looking forward to the next 10 years," said Tomas Osas, executive director of the Commission on Population (Popcom).

He quipped, "You might call it an intensity 10 conference."

The ICPD-related conference is being supported by the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA). Around 400 participants from government agencies and NGOs are expected to attend, and the diplomatic community has been invited.

Osas added, "The conference will focus on the question: 10 years after becoming a signatory to the ICPD, what has the country achieved along the conference's program of action? What challenges remain?"

Gains achieved

Population, family planning and reproductive health issues have been in the headlines once again, fueled by debates over the two-child policy advocated by Rep. Edcel Lagman. These arguments have tended to gloss over the gains, albeit modest, achieved in PopDev and reproductive rights during the last 10 years.

For example, all legal and medical safe family planning methods are now available in the country. The total fertility rate has declined from 4.1 in 1993 to 3.5 in 2003. More important, maternal deaths have declined from 209 deaths per 1,000 live births in 1990 to 172 deaths per 1,000 live births in 1998.

Women's health programs like "Women's Health and Safe Motherhood" have been given priority.

Infant death rates declined from 57 per 1,000 live births in 1990 to 49 per 1,000 live births in 1998. The death rates of children under 5 declined from 80 per 1,000 live births in 1990 to 49 in 1998.

And the life expectancy of both sexes increased from 67.4 years in 1994 to 69.3 years in 2000.

Gaps, challenges

There are, however, many gaps and challenges still confronting the PopDev and reproductive health program.

There is an urgent need, for example, to improve access, especially on the part of the poor, to improved quality reproductive health and family planning services, through appropriate budget support.

Contraceptives should be made available in the face of declining donor support.

And among our adolescents and young adults, there is a significant minority who are sexually active. There is a need to warn them of the dangers of unbridled sexuality, and to provide them with appropriate information and health services.

What is Obstructive Sleep Apnea (OSA)?

Obstructive Sleep Apnea (OSA) is a potentially life-altering and life-threatening breathing disorder that occurs during sleep.

The upper Airway repeatedly collapses, causing cessation of breathing (apnea) or inadequate breathing (hypopnea) and sleep fragmentation.

What causes the airway to collapse during sleep?

Several factors that can contribute to airway collapse are:

- Extra tissue in the back of the throat, such as large tonsils or adenoids
- A decrease in the tone of the muscles holding the airway open
- Nasal obstruction
- Certain jaw or facial structures or attributes, such as a recessed chin

How many people have OSA?

Statistics reveal that:

- 4 in 100 middle-aged men have OSA
- 2 in 100 middle-aged women have OSA
- Most OSA sufferers remain undiagnosed and untreated

Symptoms

- There are some easy-to-identify signs and symptoms associated with OSA.
- Do you snore?
- Do you choke or gasp for breath while you sleep?
- Has anyone told you that you stop breathing during sleep?
- Has your weight changed in the last 5 years?
- Have you ever nodded off or fallen asleep while driving a vehicle?
- If you answered yes to two or more of these questions, you may suffer from OSA.

Additional Symptoms include morning headaches, difficulty concentrating, depression, irritability, memory loss and sexual dysfunction.

What happens if OSA is not treated?

People who do not seek diagnosis and effective treatment for OSA can be at increased risk for:

- High Blood Pressure
- Heart Disease
- Heart Attack
- Stroke
- Fatigue-related motor vehicle and work accidents
- Decreased quality of life

What treatment are available for OSA?

The most common treatment is:

CPAP (Continuous Positive Airway Pressure) pronounced see-PAP. CPAP equipment treats OSA by providing a gentle flow of positive-pressure air through a nasal mask to keep the airway open during sleep.

With CPAP Therapy:

- Breathing becomes regular and snoring stops
- Oxygen level in the blood becomes normal
- Restful sleep is restored
- Quality of life is improved
- Risk for high blood pressure, heart disease, heart attack, stroke and vehicular or work accidents is reduced.

Sleep Diagnostic Test (Polysomnograph) is now available at LUNG CENTER OF THE PHILIPPINES. For further inquiry and scheduling call the Sleep Laboratory, Section of Respiratory Services at telephone no. 924-6101 loc. 363.

CAP still barred from selling education plans

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

THE SECURITIES and Exchange Commission has not renewed the license of pre-need giant College Assurance Plan Philippines Inc. to sell education plans.

Thus despite CAP's submission to the SEC of a memorandum of agreement with a local investor, which has committed to invest in the embattled pre-need firm.

SEC chair Fe Barin said the commission has not acted on CAP's pending application to extend the license as the company had yet to comply with other SEC requirements.

CAP's dealer license expired last Sept. 30. The SEC under former chair Lilia Baurista required CAP to submit to the SEC proof of its subscription agreement with an investor.

Green Circle and Greensquare Property Corp., firms linked to businessman-banker Romeo Roxas, have come forward and committed to invest in CAP by purchasing preferred shares.

Roxas is a close friend of the Sobrepías, the family that owns a majority stake in CAP. In exchange for these shares, these firms would transfer pieces of property to CAP.

The transfer of assets was expected to increase CAP's trust fund assets and address future liabilities of the pre-need firm.

Sources said the property firms' assets were valued at between P3 billion and P6 billion. The preferred shares were supposed to carry an option to be converted into common shares or voting shares after a certain period, based on the initial agreement between CAP and the investor.

Company sources also said CAP had completed an agreement with an investment house in Hong Kong with global operations that would allow CAP to borrow $127 million. Sources have declined to identify the investor.

Barin, however, assured the public that CAP has not closed down and would continue to service its obligations.

SEC has not specified a deadline as to when CAP should complete the requirements for the renewal of its license.

Apart from extending its dealer's license, CAP also asked the SEC to allow it to sell new education plans worth P1 billion.

In the first half, CAP recorded a net loss of P1.68 billion, 398 percent more than the net loss of P330 million during the same period last year.

CAP had recently paid penalties to the SEC for exceeding the P5-billion limit of securities it was earlier allowed to sell.

The company exceeded the limit by P64 million in August.

Cyber City invests P60M in Mindanao

By Ronnel W. Domingo

AMERICAN firm Cyber City Teleservices Ltd. is investing an additional P60 million to expand the country's first call center in Mindanao.

According to the Department of Trade and Industry, the project would add 400 seats to Cyber City's operations.

This would put the firm a step closer to meeting its objective of doubling its 2,500-strong corps of agents by the end of the year.

Cyber City, based in New Jersey and California, has a contact center base at the Clark Special Economic Zone.

"Contact center is an industry where the Philippines clearly has an edge," Trade Secretary Cesar V. Purisima said.

"It is a sector that continues to grow as a result of concerted efforts of the government and the private sector to bring in investments and provide quality jobs," he added.

He said that the industry has been growing at a fast clip over the past four years.

Estimates showed that by the end of 2004, there would be 40,000 seats and over 60,000 employees.

Revenues from local call centers were projected to reach as high as $800 million this year.

There are at least 60 companies engaged in contact centers and outsourcing services in the country.

Most of these are affiliates or subsidiaries of US-based firms catering to top Fortune 500 corporations.

Cyber City offers services ranging from traditional inbound calls to Web-enabled platform including 24-hour help desk support, tech-support e-mail, live chat and browsing assistance.

To maintain a steady supply of highly skilled workers, Cyber City has entered into partnerships with various colleges and universities through its Cyber City International School Educational Foundation Inc.

Under the arrangements, the schools will offer in their curricula elective or short courses that would equip students with the skills to make a career out of customer relation service and outsourcing.

Through this scheme, the company has increased the acceptance rate of qualified job applicants from a low of 3-5 percent to a high of 20-50 percent.

SO-SO SOCIETY

Like crop circles, Pauly Shore movies and hermaphroditism, Manila high society is an intriguing concept.

Original artwork by Jason Moss
Text by Gino de la Paz and Tals Diaz

THERE is a fluorescent pink elephant standing in the middle of a room, but no one is talking about it. Its mascara-painted, heavy-lidded eyes dart about the carpeted space, dahlings, taking attendance of who's who, who's not, and what's left of Manila's top tier.

At the far corner, there is a young politician engaged in harmless flirtation with a female scion of a shipping magnate in a southern island province. The young politician cannot read the thoughts behind her sugary smile, thus he is unaware that she thinks he looks really gay in his blinding white Hermes cravat. Milling about the room is a third-rysomething mestizo who wears his apellido like a tacky corsage, proud of his heritage as a distant relation of a friar's cousin who was in the second to the last shipload of peninsulares that disembarked on our WOW Islas Filipinas four centuries ago. An arresting pair of females tagged as "it" by the omnipotent media—all three of them—have just exited the powder room, ennuil scribbled all over their exquisite faces, unaware that they haven't quite fully dusted the white powder from their surgically-enhanced nostrils. A handsome chinito dares to pepper his conversations with French words as he rhapsodizes about his two-week wine tour in Bordeaux, glazing over the fact that he got inebriated from actually swallowing the samples of red. Le oops!

The pink, Pucci-clad elephant stands alone, a fiction among fictions.

Social satire

Like crop circles, Pauly Shore movies and hermaphroditism, Manila high society is an intriguing concept. It exists as a creation of the minds of a few, sustained by those who believe it to be exceptional. The question is, should it be taken seriously? Or is it really just a satire, a long-standing caricature of imagined gentility?

The hard facts are no-brainers: Manila is by no means the center of the world, being a small city within an impoverished country that continues to struggle with its identity and its role in the world. It is like a small town kid trying to make the exclusive guest list in a sophisticated global city. Taken from this less myopic perspective, is there any significance at all in being tagged as "elite" in an insignificant bubble? Surely there must be, for there are certain people in the social scene that think Manila is the center of the universe, the land of champagne wishes and caviar dreams. Reality alert! They are really dealing with flat supermarket wine and bogoong from Batangas.

Players and paparazzi

Many of the players are anything but powerful, relying more on just-add-water kind of fame instead of genuine accomplishment. On one hand, there are chambers who are trudging on to scale the anthill, one photo in the paparazzi page at a time. On the other, one can find self-proclaimed Manila royalty creating traffic with their smuggled Ford Expeditions and ex-Marine bodyguards.

Then there are the envious who constantly piss into this small pond of big fish, because they do not know how to swim in it or go against the current. There are also overstyled glossies, reasonably all 100 of them in circulation, that come out with "It" lists and "A-lists" and lists within those lists featuring the same familiar names. But for whose gratification?

Ah... but to criticize high society means that one is not a part of it, to paraphrase Oscar Wilde (who has, by the way, been quoted one too many times by the chroniclers of high society living). Nonetheless, we need the elite to exist as society's models, as people to emulate. Yet what we believe is sorely needed is more of a meritocracy over a moneytalkracy. To place an emphasis on substance over form, and put the "class" back into the upper class.

Now that would be something worth writing about, n'est-ce pas?

From the artist Jason Moss:

Twisted logic? My statement "If you want a war, make your own clothes" symbolically is something you have, whether it be the expensive clothes on you, or something you have received, kept and paraded. Clothes do not make you a society figure or less of who you truly are to yourself.

WANT to know the latest craze? What's hot all over the world? It's the Swatch Bunnysutra!... The Swatch that was recently on the front page of the New York Times and even had its own billboard on Times Square! It used to be out of stock but now it's available at all Gift Gate and Swatch Stores and Kiosks. Ragging about riches

By Tim Yap

THE BATTLE for air kiss superiority and boldfaced name-dropping authority began long ago.

Manila society—all 500 or 50,000 (depends on who's quoting whom) are all into looking at themselves in the glamorized photo albums also known as "society magazines."

Philippine Tatler has led the way when nobody dared venture into "high-so" life. Editor in chief Anton San Diego is proud of the fact that their title pioneered the genre.

But wait, Lifestyle Asia, its closest competitor, states that it has been around longer. The publication just went on hiatus and was recently re-launched under the Mega group, with Sari Yap as editor in chief (her predecessor, Liza Ilarde, is now the EIC of Mega.)

And now, another challenger, Metro Society is on its way to give the two rags about people's riches a run for their publishing money. The team is composed of Lis Bernardo with Philip Cu-Unjieng and if we're not mistaken, Raul Manzano.

On this page, note the similarity between The Philippine Tatler and Lifestyle Asia covers. (Metro Society is coming out with its maiden issue next month.) The Power Issue—both of them boldly declare on their pages.

Who's really more powerful? Who's the original and who's the copycat? Who will win the battle for society supremacy?

Gretchen marks her

By Tim Yap

'I think she's competing with Dominique for Tony's attention. And it's sad because she can keep on trying—but she's not cute. My daughter is.'

I didn't want to fight," says Gretchen Barretto, who has been mum all these years when the topic starts to veer towards society matriarch Meldy Cojuangco.

The Meldy vs Gretchen saga has been brewing for more than a decade now. In between these two ladies are people they both love: Tonyboy, who is the partner of Gretchen and the son of Meldy, and Dominique, Tonyboy and Gretchen's daughter.

So much has been written about this family feud. The latest installment that irked Gretchen and forced her to finally speak up was this tidbit which came out in the August issue of Metro Magazine. It reads:

"How many grandchildren does Imelda Cojuangco have? 'I should say 157' she whispers with a self-conscious giggle, in reference to son Tonyboy's little girl with actress Gretchen Barretto. 'Fourteen,' the art patroness and high society doyenne eventually decides.

Here in this Super! explosive exclusive, Gretchen, like a lioness defending her cub, uncorks years of pent-up pain and emotion for the first time in defense of Dominique.

Why have you kept quiet all these years? The grandchildren issue has been around for quite some time already, why react now?

"Because it's not the first time she's done it. She has done it even before Dominique was born. When I was pregnant, she would already tell everyone that she will not accept the baby—and that was Dominique.

"When Dominique was barely one year old, she came out again in the Inquirer. That was Mother's Day, and she did it deliberately. They would ask, 'How many grandchildren do you have?' She'll name each one of them. And when it comes to Tony, she'll say, 'With Tony, my grandchild is Patricia.' It was only one name.

"So, of course, she was insinuating that she did not and will not accept Dominique—and with that statement, she insinuated other things as well.

"At that time, I was only 25. I just took it. Even if I didn't want to take it, I just did. But she wasn't content because the year after, she came out with the same thing again. She did it I think three times. And when Dominique turned four—that was a Father's Day issue—she came out in the Inquirer again. That was on the front page, with two full pages inside, you can look at your library. She said a mouthful.

"At that time, again I did not react. Simply because in our culture, you don't bite anyone who's older. And that has become my rule—never to fight anyone who's in their menopause stage, or older than that, or in their dying age—as a sign of respect.

"I think what was most difficult was that she came up with a lot of issues. Every first quarter of the year since I was with Tony—and we are pushing eleven years this coming February—she would pay writers to come out with rumors like I am going out with a younger, cute guy and that Tony is going out with a younger, very pretty actress. That's always at the same time, every year. And I always did not comment. Because if I did, a lot of things would come out of my mouth, a lot of things that I will regret.

"So I just told myself, well, since I grew up in show business, I'm really used to intrigues, I'll survive this. Kaya ko na to. Kakayunin ko to.

"And then when Dominique was four, that thing happened. She said all those nasty things. I kept quiet. The only comfort I had during that time was if she does anything nasty towards any of us—Tony, Dominique and me—I promised myself that I will come out. I am not going to allow her to malign my daughter, Tony or me.

"And it was quiet for awhile. Although in the midst of all these, a lot of things have been said. Like four years ago, Lizette Banzon-Cojuangco, the sister-in-law of Tony, started spreading rumors and it reached me through (the late) Rico Yan. She said that when Dominique was playing in Meldy's house, they got a doctor to draw blood from her and when they examined it, it didn't match Tony's.

"Kahit sa pagka-fighter ko, I kept it. I cried and cried and cried. I cried because my normal reaction would not be like that. Iyak ako pero talaban ako. Tao lang ako eh, I'm gonna fight. But I had to stop myself. Kasi, ayoko na ito lumaki, hindi ko sila kayang labanan.

"So I told myself, the next time Meldy comes out, I'm gonna speak. And guess what? She did. She came out again in Metro Magazine. I don't want to fight with her. But then I felt also, for somebody who goes to church every single day, no miss, how can she be so heartless, hitting on somebody, hitting on a child! Dominique was unborn and now she is only 9. She doesn't know how to fight. She doesn't know what's going on.

"Meidy has hit me all these years and I took it. If she continues to hit me now, I might keep quiet. But she's hitting my daughter already. So akin lang, I think it's about time that she stopped obsessing over Dominique and me. Because I think to obsess over 10 years, 11 years, over a person, is far too long."

Why do you think she's doing it?
"I think she's competing with Dominique for Tony's attention. And it's sad because she can keep on trying—but she's not cute. My daughter is."

"I find it amazing how she continues to chant 'I don't accept Gretchen, I don't accept Dominique.' Madali naman akong kausap eh. I have accepted that a long time ago. And I wish she could stop!"

Did you make efforts to get close to her?
"Oh, I did! When Dominique was five months old, I sent Dominique that September for her (Meidy's) birthday with flowers. She never said thank you, she never acknowledged—nothing! Fine with me. I sent her tons of cake, flowers—nothing!"

"I know how to try, I know how to try hard. But I also know when to stop. I know when it's painful, I know when things don't work, and I also know how to go on with my life. And with all the hurt that she has caused me, all these years, I really decided after that big interview in INQUIRER, well it's time. I told Tony that it's time that I move on with my life, it's time that I accept that she will never accept Dominique and me. And we've been living our life away from her. Hindi ko siya hinahanap and I think that I've learned not to look for who and what I don't have. I enjoy what I have. My happiness is not built around whether she accepts me or not. Or accepts my daughter or not."

"I barely know this person. I barely know Meidy. She never gave me the chance but that's fine, I respect her if that's what she wants. But life is fleeting—a lot of people have been dying, left and right, people we know. And I've also decided that I choose to live my life, to savor every moment I have. I don't wanna obsess over Meidy. I'm coming out to let all her sosyal friends know that I am not gonna allow her to malign Dominique or my being."

"Whatever I have, I've worked hard for. Whatever I have more than what I've worked for were all gifts to me from Tony. Nobody can come up to me or nobody can talk behind my back and say that I have in my possession

'All these years, she has been saying she doesn't accept Dominique. Has she ever stopped, thought, for one minute, or asked herself whether Tony and I accept her as the grandmother of my daughter? Because I don't accept her as the grandmother of my daughter.'

something that was ill-gotten. Now, I'm asking Meidy—can she say the same thing about herself?"

"And talking about her saying that she doesn't accept Dominique. All these years she has been saying she doesn't accept Dominique. Has she ever stopped, thought for one minute, or asked herself whether Tony and I accept her as the grandmother of my daughter? Because I don't accept her as the grandmother of my daughter."

"First of all, she's not the best example that the world can offer. Really, you know? She's got legal cases to attend to—must I mention the legal cases? If my daughter finds out when she's old enough, I can just almost hear what she's gonna say. 'What a disgrace!'"

"She tries to act like a queen, dressed in white, jeweled up, dolled up, when we all know that she was nothing but the alalay of Imelda Marcos. I just want to remind her that she doesn't impress me at all."

Have you guys ever talked face to face?
"Many times. Christmas dinners at (Tony's brother) Choy's or whoever's house and it would just be the most depressing day of my life. I've spent three Christmases with them and after that I told Tony that I don't want to put myself in that situation again. It's just too depressing. And it was obvious they never accepted me. Fine, fine!"

All of them?
"Well, they all follow Meidy. They're all puppets of Meidy. They're all puppets, and she hates me because I don't follow her. I wasn't born to be her slave. I wasn't born to be a puppet of Meidy."

"I learned to work at an early age. I put food on the table, I paid rent, I did many things in life. I have many ambitions but it's not one of my ambitions to be a puppet of hers."

But was there ever a time that you felt she reached out to you?

"Never."
So she completely closed her doors?
"From the start. From the very beginning."

What do you call her, Mama Meidy, tita?
"Nothing. I don't call her anything."

How about when you see each other, do you guys even nod, or say, "Hi, Mrs. Cojuangco?"

"Nothing. I'd kiss her and it would be like she never saw anything or anyone. She'd look up in the air. Para siyang Be la Flores."

So you guys never talked like, "Hey, I want to be close to you, please give me the chance," from your side?
"No. How could I when, from the very start I heard a lot of things already? If I went to the Christmas dinners it was not to see her but to be with Tony and Dominique."

GRETCH C6

Gretch marks her spot

So every time you attend the Christmas dinners you'd feel the animosity from everyone?

"The only one that was really nice to me was Choy. The only one who'd stay around was Choy. He was the only one decent enough."

How about Dominique, does she ever ask about her loss?

"Well, she would go there before, during their Saturday lunches, and Tony told me that when Dominique saw Meldy, she was hysterical. Maybe because of the makeup. Di ba when you're a kid and you see somebody with thick make up—seriously! You know, my daughter is afraid of characters kasi, up to now. She really freaked out."

"I remember the only conversation we had was on one Christmas, when she said 'Walang modo yung anak mo, hindi ako huahalikan.' Syempre gusto ko siyang sagutin, but I just smiled."

So are you still mad at her?

"I'm more mad at how heartless she could be. If two adults fight, we can throw words at each other and that's fine. But to fight with someone who is mine?

"And umm, a few months after that Inquirer article, she... (Pauses, takes a deep breath, then continues) This, not a lot of people know. Maybe two months after, Meldy... (Pauses again) This is the reason why I'm talking now, because I feel I really have to unload all the hurt. Two months after the article, I haven't even gotten over the things she has said, my ex calls me up on my cell phone, and he was looking for Tony. And he said it was urgent. I felt it was so urgent that I started screaming and I said, 'Why, what's happening, tell me?' And he said, 'Well, Meldy Cojuangco came to me and she asked me to, um, to tell everybody, to accept, angkutan mo na si Dominique kasi anak mo naman siya.' Can you imagine what I've been taking all these years?"

And you didn't say anything?

"The reason that I didn't speak up is because of my love and respect for Tony. I wanted to keep the peace. But I'm gonna go insane if I don't speak up. She tries to project she's a holy person, but..."

What do you think they want you to do, leave Tony, is that it?

"Well, I'm sorry to break it to her—I'm sorry to break it to you, Meldy—but I'm here to stay. I'm here to stay. Whether or not she turns blue from anger, whether or not she drops dead in jealousy or whatever it is she's feeling, (stresses) I'm here to stay. It's not her who's gonna destroy us. I'm not gonna allow anyone to destroy us."

"I'm gonna take this relationship to my grave, whether she likes it or not."

How about Tony, how does he feel about this situation with his mom?

"He's embarrassed. He's disappointed. I can't really talk to Tony about Meldy because he all of a sudden turns into the Incredible Hulk when you mention her name."

"When Dominique was all of eight months, Tony was having a massage. All of a sudden, he screamed 'Ouch!' And then Dom went crawling fast to the yaya. She didn't even have teeth yet, she bit the maid and started hitting the maid to protect her dad! She was so ready to protect her dad."

There's been so much pain and so much that has happened between all of you. But is it in any way mendable?

"Definitely not. We've known that all these years. That's why we just kept away. We're just living our own life."

You think Dominique knows about the situation?

"She knows, she knows! My daughter is smart. And I tell her, your tata doesn't... (and then she corrects herself) the mom of your dad doesn't accept you. And I tell her because I know she's gonna hear it somewhere. I'd rather it comes from me. We tell her everything."

She's never cried about it to you?

"She prayed. Can you imagine, she prayed for her?"

"Why can't I fight back? That's what I asked Tony. Maybe she keeps on fighting with me because I haven't been fighting back. I've been taking it. I'm not gonna take it anymore."

"If she says anything against my daughter, I'm gonna throw the bomb."

What do you want to achieve by saying these things?

"By making it known to everybody that hey, I am not the old Gretchen who will lock herself up in the room and cry all day, all night, because of what she said."

But people don't know that you lock yourself in a room and cry. They think that you're putting up a brave front. Nobody knows that you cry alone.

"Well, I'm human. I cry. When you hit my daughter, I will cry. When you hit me, I will still cry. But I'm not afraid anymore. I'm not afraid of the consequences."

How do you think it will affect Dominique?

"I don't know. What I know is that all these things that she's been doing and saying, they're already affecting Dominique. I'm just here to defend her. That's why I'm coming out. Because I want to show Dominique that we are here to protect her, just like the way she protected her dad when she was eight months old. It's an instinct that people have when they love each other."

How about you, do you think that Dominique is strong enough?

"I hope so. I'm trying to raise her to be strong. After all, to belong to the Copungco family, you have to be strong, otherwise you'll be dead. If I didn't grow up in show business, I would have died a long time ago with all the things she has thrown at me."

"The funny part is, I haven't been doing movies for 11 years now. I have no TV show and yet rumors about me are so present, as if I have a movie coming out. Where is it all coming from? When I was doing ASAP two years ago, Meldy started saying, huwalay na siya, because Tony cut her allowance. Wala na raw pera si Gretchen. She has to work! (Laughs)"

So now, you think your family is stronger because of all these trials?

"Oh, definitely. We have only each other. It's not easy. Really, not easy! It's not normal."

So what's your final message to her?

"Sorry to break it to Meldy, but Dominique has Tony's brains. You know when she's old enough, just give her a few years. I'm giving Meldy a few years. Dominique will be strong enough and smart enough to answer Meldy. But now that she is only nine, it will be me that she will have to deal with."

A grandmother, a mother and a daughter. Among these three, who bears the heaviest weight?

I guess Gretchen put it best when she told this writer about one of their most intimate family moments. "When we would pray at night, we would take turns, so Dominique was the last one. She said, 'Dear God, please bless the mom of my dad even if she doesn't like me. Keep her in the palm of Your hand.'"

And Tonyboy and Gretchen burst into tears.

Wind Talker

Dear Man About Town,

My problem is really embarrassing. I think I suffer from flatulence. I haven't consulted with a doctor yet, but I'm pretty sure my condition is not what you'd consider normal. I know everybody passes gas once in awhile, but how often is "normal"? In my case, it happens at least a dozen times a day. It is totally unexpected and uncontrollable. Talk about awkward: two weeks ago I was having dinner with my girlfriend's parents in an expensive restaurant and I farted during a break in the conversation. Another time, I was in the middle of a business presentation at work! People usually pretend not to notice, but I know that they do. Save me!

TO THINK natural gas is supposedly a nonrenewable energy source! If only technology and social etiquette allowed science to exploit its power and persistence, we might yet turn the fart into fuel. Imagine a world delivered from poverty, famine, disease, and war by a resource ably generated by even the most corpulent and slothful of beer-guzzling couch potatoes. No longer would the fart be marginalized; it would henceforth be welcomed as the roaring sound of progress, heralding the breaking winds of change. The stench would be a small price to pay for world peace.

Unfortunately, it may take considerable time before digestive gases could be harnessed to, say, charge a cellular phone battery—no Smart Fart ads in the foreseeable future (this would lead a disturbing dimension to that whole passel campaign, maybow). For now, it re-

GLOBAL DERMATOLOGY 2004

1ST ANNUAL CONVENTION
WESTIN PHILIPPINE PLAZA HOTEL
OCTOBER 1-3, 2004

MESSAGES

Malacañan Palace, Manila

My cordial greetings to all the officers and members of the Philippine Academy of Clinical and Cosmetic Dermatology (PACCD) as you hold your 1st Annual Convention dubbed as "Global Dermatology 2004".

I laud your serious efforts in upholding the interests of clinical and cosmetic dermatology in the Philippines. As a young corporation of the best and the brightest professional dermatologists in the country, your providing our people with the means to revitalize and enhance their physical well-being through the use of the latest breakthroughs and innovations in the field of dermatology inspires them to lead fuller and more productive lives. Indeed, your organization in striving to elevate the profession to global standards is doing our country a great service.

This convention will help lay the foundations for more worthy undertakings intended to benefit the common good. I urge you to remain steadfast in pursuing your objectives while contributing to our economic and social transformation. Together, let us stand united in working for a better quality of life for all Filipinos.

I wish you all a successful convention. MABUHAY!

Gloria Arroyo
GLORIA MACAPAGAL ARROYO
President, Republic of the Philippines

I convey my warm greetings to the officers and members of the Philippine Academy of Clinical and Cosmetic Dermatology on the holding of their 1st Annual Convention entitled "Global Dermatology 2004".

The Department of Health is privileged to have you as one of its partners in the sustained development of the country's health care system. May this event be a venue to strengthen your unity and empower your members to achieve global competitiveness.

May you continue to provide essential opportunities and benefits to your members and further improve your services to respond to the challenges of the times.

I wish you a successful convention. Congratulations and mabuhay kayong lahat!

Manuel M. Dayrit
MANUEL M. DAYRIT M.D., MSc.
Secretary of Health

The PMA Board of Governors joins me in expressing best wishes to you the officers and members of the Philippine Academy of Clinical and Cosmetic Dermatology as you celebrate its first anniversary and mark its 1st Annual Convention on the theme, "Global Dermatology 2004".

We feel truly fortunate and gratified to join you in welcoming participants and delegates to this double header of an event. A maiden anniversary always calls for a celebration. To turn it into a milestone, make it an occasion for the total reaffirmation of your commitment to bring the aspirations and goals of the PACCD to glittering success. We look forward to a most fruitful convention.

Congratulations! Mabuhay ang Philippine Academy of Clinical and Cosmetic Dermatology.

BU C. Castro
BU C. CASTRO, M.D., LLB, FPSP
President, Philippine Medical Association

The Academy is known to undertake continuous medical education and training covering the scope of what is new in dermatology.

Global Dermatology 2004 is the vision of the Academy where increasing body of knowledge in medical science has increased ten fold in the past decade. We encourage attendance to international and local scientific meet and symposiums sharing knowledge with each other.

I want to ensure also, that the PACCD legislative and regulatory activities are appropriate, aggressive and forward directed, protecting the rights of all dermatologists and physicians in the country.

We convey our health care message to the public

means a social faux pas. Which is really quite surprising, given that this is a totally normal bodily process. Everybody farts—your girlfriend, her parents, your work colleagues at work and, yes, even your parish priest. The significant variables in your situation appear to be quantity and controllability.

Flatulence is the state of having excessive stomach or intestinal gas, resulting in a bloated feeling, as well as increased belching and passing of gas from the rectum. Most people produce from one to three pints and pass gas as often as 14 times a day. I know some my readers are shaking their heads in protest, but this is a medical fact. I mean fact. Some people even do so up to 25 times a day! That's enough cheese cutting to rival Kraft. Remember it is possible to expel flatulence (technical term for butt burp) without being aware of it. A dozen times a day? Buddy, you're not even in the Big League yet. Write me back when the flowers start dying up.

Paths, possibilities

Excess gas in the digestive tract (which consists of your esophagus, stomach, small and large intestines) is the result of two processes: increased intake of gas, for example, from air you swallow; or increased production of gas as certain undigested foods are broken down by harmless bacteria normally found in your colon.

Aerophagia, or swallowed air, is the result of a variety of habits. If you swallow food improperly, gulp beer too fast, chew gum, overdose on tobacco products or carbonated drinks, inhale helium from party balloons, or hyperventilate during sex, you tend to ingest more air than your body needs. Some of this captured gas is released through the amnesty of belching (which, ironically, also causes flatulence), but the rest is left to find a way out through Guantanamo Butt. So Lesson No. 1 is, ingest everything at a relaxed pace.

And then there's the food you eat. Your body does not digest or absorb some forms of carbohydrates because of a shortage or absence of certain enzymes in your small intestines. This undigested food then passes from the small intestines into the large intestines where normal, harmless bacteria break down the food, producing hydrogen, carbon dioxide and, in about a third of all people, methane (the stuff that ignites). Eventually these gases exit through the rectum, where they develop potential and personality as comic fodder.

Once again, carbohydrates are the bad guys. Seems Dr Atkins wasn't prosecutor enough to this food group; now flatulence breaks the silence and points an accusing finger at carbs as well. Potatoes, noodles, cabbage, broccoli, asparagus, corn, wheat, beer, red wines, onions, artichokes, and fibrous foods are all accessory to the crime. Even most fruits containing Sorbitol (a sugar found in apples, pears and prunes) are guilty. Did I forget to mention beans? There's a catchy ditty immortalizing the musical bean like it was VH1's Parlist of the Month (the local version promotes kamote consumption). Lesson No. 2: balance your diet.

There's a host of other possible causes of flatulence such as poor dietary fiber, parasites, lactase deficiency, malabsorption syndromes, intestinal obstruction (ouch), inflammatory bowel disease (ouch), poor thyroid function, narcotic abuse, and pain old tough luck, but the first two are the most common reasons people suffer for their fart. If you start passing gas excessively (we're talking more than 25 times a day), have accompanying pains, nausea, fevers, vomiting, bleeding, or flaming ghosts shoot out of your ass demanding vengeance from the Spanish colonialists, then you should see a physician. Or a priest.

I'm not sure I can help you, though, on the matter of controlling the timing. Logically, it should be easier if you are able to regulate your gas production. In a case of life-threatening fart, think of it as stockpiling nuclear warheads: the less plutonium you amass, the more effectively you can monitor each weapon of gas destruction, and the more accurately you can dispatch a controlled detonation. Republicans fart a lot.

Bombs away!

And if one does happen to accidentally explode, well, what can you do? Damage control depends on the auditory and olfactory—sound and fury—aspects, as well as the circumstances of your immediate environment. The most uncomfortable characteristic of flatulence is total unreliability. It is indiscriminate of location or audience—during dinner and lovemaking, at the movies, State of the Nation addresses, weddings and funerals—thank God they're not contagious, or the world would be a less hospitable planet. The best-case scenario is when no one actually notices (stealth bomb)—just go on with life and let the gas escape surreptitiously into an unsuspecting atmosphere. Almost as good is a crowded area which makes the source indistinguishable (smart bomb), like a bus. Worst case is when it's just you and another person you have just met, or highly respect, within a confined area (suicide attack), maybe a blind date in the car, or the Pope in a confessional booth. You can't even lie.

Otherwise, treat the fart as an unfortunate but trivial event, worthy of little else but comic relief. Gas does not make the man, clothes do. While excessive flatulence is cause for some embarrassment, it comes nowhere near the realm of spousal abuse or financial fraud. And it can be solved. Take your time breathing. Watch what you eat. Force out as much as you can before leaving the house. Refuse to be ruled by gas, my friend, for we are masters of our own digestive destinies and captains of our shit. We are the directors, writers and principal actors of this play called Metabolism. Flatulence has but a small part.

"When did reality become TV? Whatever happened to sitcoms, game shows? And when did Ozzy become an actor? Please make this stop, stop, stop" -Howling for Soup, "1985"

FROM being a means for computers to share scientific and military info in the '60s to a one-stop shop for vintage Rochas and unsolicited advice in the '00s, the Internet has definitely taken the global economy toward various peaks and pitfalls. It has, in fact, become a modern-day French Revolution, one that has made life more democratic for some but even more nerve-racking for others. Like all forms of digital technology that came before it, the Internet has changed the marketplace forever by rapidly increasing the power and magnitude of ordinary schemes in create products and services—crappy or otherwise—and sell them online. Zzzzzz. Okay, for all of you with ADHD, this is the Cliff's Notes version: the Internet has produced a more accessible and commercial way of life for the masses. Or following the historical slant in this argument, Marie Antoinette faints along as:

In the realm of pop or entertainment, reality television was a likely offshoot—a bastard byproduct, if you will—of the so-called Internet revolution. In an interview with CNN's Garrick Utley in 2000, Columbia University business professor Bernd Schmitt said, "What is happening is that a human desire that has always been there is now put to the marketplace and is becoming commercialized. Customers are enjoying being part of that commercial experience on a global basis." Translation: From Greenand to Ghana, everyone is getting hip to TV whoredom!

Viewers used to s'mply want to be part of the lives of a few people in a house, on TV, and online. To illustrate this, TV land had only four reality shows in the summer of 2000. Now, it seems, the general public doesn't mind selling its soul; the number of reality series has ballooned to more than 40 in the United States alone. With shows ranging from "Amish in the City" to "The Benefactor," the quest for fame and a small fortune has turned a majority of the world's mild-mannered citizens into money-hungry manimals in as little as four years. If reality television is the Zeitgeist for contemporary community living, has the price of fame reached an all-time low? Given that, is anonymity now more desirable than celebrity?

Lack of consciousness

The Internet has the ability to empower any random individual and it has bequeathed that same can-do spirit to its evil spawn, reality television. In the few times that I will care to quote her Anna Wintour observes, "Reality television has made it possible for practically anyone to capture mass attention overnight."

The first drawback to this new kind of people power is the triumph of form over substance. Here's a preview: "Hey you, Yes, you. Look at me. I'm so hot, I can look like a rock star. Or a VJ. Or a model." Oh, did I mention I'll eat donkey poo, catch gonorrhea or sell my left kidney—anything—just to be a celebrity? Yup. That's exactly what we're looking at right now—a whole generation of great looking, fast-talking, media-savvy kids who look like they could be rock stars, VJs or models, but are sadly none of the above. Talk about posing.

What's so wrong with mochi snacks passing themselves off as diamond necklaces? It's about presentation and everyone wanting to be models," gripes Italian-Canadian director Floria Sigmond, the woman responsible for Sugar Rush and Marilyn Man-

YOU BORN TODAY: You have an appreciation for the relationship of things: color to color, texture to texture, word to word and person to person. This makes you an excellent critic, arbitrator and judge. People like you because you're witty, charming and attractive. Let go of things this year to make way for new things to enter your life.

Birthday of: Mohandas Gandhi, nonviolent reformer, Kelly Ripa, actress, Sting, musician/vactor.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You have so much to learn about you, self from your closest relationships and partnerships now. Take what is offered to you. It won't always come to you easily.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Never forget that the year ahead offers you the greatest opportunity you've had for more than a decade to improve your job. What does this mean? Make hay while the sun shines!

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): Your love life and all kinds of exciting, romantic flirtations will be ever so promising this year. Vacations and fun getaways are also on the menu. Get ready to party!

CANCER (June 21 to July 22): Everything having to do with real estate, family business, your domestic life and your home and family will improve enormously this year. You have much to be grateful for.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): Short trips, increased reading and writing, plus conversations with neighbors make this an upbeat, memorable year. A big plus for you in the year ahead is that your frame of mind will remain optimistic!

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): It definitely looks like more money is coming your way this year. And by extension, you're spending more as well! Who is surprised?

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Jupiter is now in your sign. It hasn't been here for 12 years. Jupiter represents luck, good fortune, expansion and joy. Expect a lot more of this! Yay!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Privately, you're becoming more spiritual and more in tune with your inner world. This doesn't have to be anything fancy-schmancy. It just means that you have a better idea of what makes you happy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Your popularity rating really increases this year. Groups, clubs, organizations and your friends all want to see your face. (Lucky you.)

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19): Your career has never looked better! You believe that destiny has a special place marked just for you. This is the year to make a name for yourself. Go for broke!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): All kinds of educational and travel opportunities come your way this year. Please grab some of them. Don't let these opportunities pass you by.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): You definitely benefit from the wealth of others this year. Partners will learn more. You can expect extended credit, reduced debt, inheritances and gifts to come your way. (Sweet.)

Because we gotta!

FEW CAN claim a feat as outstanding as the kind that Hed Kandi has accomplished in the past half decade. A handful might actually be pushing it—in such a brief period, DJ and A&R Man Mark Doyle carried this lifestyle concept to excellent heights by incorporating a record label, a radio show, international club nights and a distinct graphic style all under the single groovy banner "Hed Kandi." Presently, the brand enjoys benchmark status among musicians, DJs and clubbers from all over the planet. And it is relentless in its continuous pursuit to grow even more in providing the audience with quality sounds.

Speaking of Hed Kandi's "international club nights," a gig here in Manila would definitely fall into that category. As part of the annual BIG FISH tradition of organizing superior club music parties, Hed Kandi returns to the country with acclaimed DJ Andy Norman. This talented man appears regularly for Hed Kandi at the likes of Pacha, London, and El Divino, Ibiza, headlining Kandi's VIP tent at Godskitchen Global Gathering Gatecrasher One and playing at the Glitter Ball in Miami, to name a few.

Saturday, October 2

The spotlight is trained on NBC Tent tonight as Hed Kandi's DJ Andy Norman dominates the deck with his mixing skills. Gates open at 10, but you should come earlier if you still don't have a ticket. As usual, special privileges await Stuart subscribers... hummm... I'm thinking it might ultimately be cheaper if I Hurry up or you might miss the last day for the second emerald year offering of Ballet Philippines, "BP Goes Global." The numbers will include "Aku and Buhay" by acting artistic director Alden Lagnasin, which won at the 9th Concours International de Danse de Paris, France, in 2000; "Chester Psa.ms" by Alice Reyes, Rotislav Zakharov's "Gopak;" Redha's "Les Petit Mots d'Amour;" Alvin Toientino's "Field 1," and Augustus Damian III's "Evacuation," this one on its Philippine premiere. Show schedules are 10 a.m., 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. at the CCP Main Theater. Call 832-6011 or 551-1003 for details.

Monday, October 4

You will notice that the week ahead is all about serving good causes. Today, it's an art exhibit and auction at the Manila Peninsula's Rugodon Ballroom for the benefit of Avon's Kiss son's best videos ever. She was talking about music videos but one could also repurpose her hang-up to sum up the current lack of connoisseurship among the youth today. See, there used to be a time when people who looked like fashionistas were, in truth, fashionistas, who were able to back it all up with the required experience, information and designer wardrobes. These days, though, you'd be hard-pressed to find the real deal despite the wave of authenticity that everyone seems to be riding on. You have best-dressed people who wear Mango(1), VJs with poor-to-average taste in music and, worst of all, attractive teens and twentysomethings who don't sound anything like they look. It's tough.

What you 'see'

The next side effect of reality TV's evened-out playing field is that we can no longer not judge a book by its cover. In heaven, there would be a world of reasons why that statement is wrong. But in our upside-down pop culture universe, it makes perfect sense. "I read it on the Internet and I saw it on TV, so it must be true," you assume. Who can blame you? With its assurance of life's situations at their "rawest" and "most unrehearsed," reality TV is encouraging us to stop at the surface because backstage has now moved to the forefront. In short, the whole shebang is now on display, leaving close to nothing for the imagination. (Planet Earth seems to be shouting from the rooftops, "This is real!" or whatever to that effect, not knowing that "what you see is what you get" can also be code for "best foot forward." Think about it.) Everyone seems to be so extroverted these days, to the point of being defensive about earnestness and honesty. Still, if you think about it, how "real" can one get with cameras everywhere and/or the promise of celebrity hanging in the balance?

The cheapening of fame

Last and most significant, by putting mediocre individuals on the prime time pedestal, reality TV has tarnished and perverted the entire concept of fame. "In an age of reality TV and Internet self-exposure, mass celebrity has become downright uncool. Niche renown is chic; notoriety is not," Vogue's Sally Singer writes about the differences between the new crop of catwalk idols and the Old Testament supermodels. I couldn't agree more.

Call me a sarcastic, anti-populist prick, but I believe in appropriate levels of conspicuousness, even for these "celebrities." Vapid celeb-nots embroiling themselves in sex tape scandals, cheesy television personalities announcing the infected state of their vaginas, and the like are guilty pleasures that must never become facts of everyday life. Paraphrasing myself from a previous article, that is just so B-list. I repeat, B-list.

Dot uncommon

As a card-carrying member of the Baby Boomlet, I find it hard to imagine life before the Internet. When I manage to do so, all I see are stills from a really bad karaoke video: sunbathing grannies with baby backpacks, high-waisted models wearing lots and lots of shoulder pads and David Hasselhoff looking aggressively vulgar in a pair of red Speedos. Ah, the primitive past. Thank God for ch-changes, as David Bowie stuttered.

Nonetheless, there is a part of me that hankers for the good old days when technology meant a Speak-N-Spell. After all, the notion of celebrity and fame then was less complicated compared to how it is now; fact and fiction were completely polarized and much easier to distinguish. Besides that, the only thing that came close to reality programming back in the day was the evening news and that was meant to inform a viewer, not add to his frustration.

By using the you-zig-zag mentality of the intellectually trendy, I think it would be logical that the opposite of reality TV and all its trappings will become the next big thing. Learning from our more-mild-than-wild, Internet-free past, this is what I have to offer: If you don't want to be part of the dot common herd, hang on to your privacy. Contrary to the dictates of the times, anonymity is indeed the new popularity.

Tuesday, October 5

Hello? V-Bar tonight yet again! On its way to becoming the most popular weeknight club party, V-Bar on Tuesdays is a never-fail, never-pale affair! Hip-hop music for men and women who want to shake their booty (and boy, do they do just that!)—come and see. Ten-ish is a little early, but if you want to get a table, it won't hurt. Try not to call in sick the next day, though.

Wednesday, October 6

Few people probably noticed him as the best-bud hallucination of Russell Crowe in "A Beautiful Mind," but Paul Bettany surely caught the attention of Jennifer Connelly (they are together now, sorry Russell). And, with the opening of the romantic flick "Wimbledon," he is obviously taking notice steadily—that of Kirsten Dunst, who plays his leading lady, and the producers. Looks like an entertaining-enough endeavor if you want to watch a light one. In theaters starting today.

Thursday, October 7

If only to appreciate the political, judicial, artistic and industrial craftsmen who have helped mold our country in one way or another, check out the Newsbreakers Auction. Donors include former presidents Corason Aquino and Fidel Ramos; artist Anita Magsaysay-Ho; Don Jaime Zobel de Ayala, Education Secretary Florencio Abad, and Chief Justice Hilario Davide. Proceeds will go to the Independent Journalism Fund, which supports the publication Newsbreak. For more inquiries, please call 687-5528 or 687-5524.

Friday, October 8

The very intriguing advertisement of "Leanna," a play about language, power and sex, is compelling. Bart Guingona directs and stars in it opposite the lovely Lara Fabregas, whose face is emblazoned on the poster. Opening tonight, 8 p.m., at Stageworks, 5th level, Edsa Shangri-La Mall. CONGRATULATIONS, pare! Aside from winning some Super! surprises, Joey, you now have the chance—no, the privilege—nay, the HONOR—of reporting to the Super! office at un-goldly hours to help us caption all the photos in our section. Such great wit must not go unrewarded, don't you think? Just kidding... except for the bit where you won stuff. To claim your prize call the INQUIRER Marketing Department at 8978808 and look for Hazel or Ching.

Of course, we just couldn't leave out the runners-up, who also kept us in stitches. Good work guys!

This Week's Challenge

AS COLUMNISTS for this newspaper, we like to start our days by reading about the big, bad world outside Super! And surprise, surprise! Last Thursday's front page had a particularly—how do we put this?—hair-raising photo.

The cover star was none other than our beloved President GMA drumming up support for local tourism. Though we respect her office, our wicked little minds just couldn't help it. Yes, this snapshot is just begging for your caption!

Yeah, sure. We normally like living on the edge, pissing off tons of folks and stuff, but this week, our contest comes with a caveat. Since the woman in the photo is, after all, the PRESIDENT OF OUR COUNTRY, any blow too low to Tita Glo will make her push a button and before you know it, you will burst into flames, wondering if it was the heat in Manila or the Bicol express you had for lunch that did you in. Super! should know. Does anyone remember a columnist named Lex? Anyone? Where are you, Lex? We miss you! But we digress. Big time. (Insert awkward silence here.)

We are stoked that lots of you take time out to write in. So what are you stalling for? Send your entries to super@inquirer.com.ph. Please, not to the Malacañang inbox. Later!
